"The essential quality of a market system, contrary to popular thinking, is not that it promotes greed; But rather, that it renders greed harmless." Israel Kirzner

Un-Mask America!

Exactly how long does it take for your BS detector to go off? It's been a year now. There is absolutely no science, that hasn't been disputed, that can tell us masks curb the spread of Covid. Same with social distancing, lockdowns, and business closures. It's all about silencing you and getting control over you.

Virus molecules are smaller than bacteria molecules, both super small and microscopic. Just like air molecules. This means that a mask that could completely stop a virus, would also likely suffocate you. Most of the masks in use are like trying to catch mosquitos with a chain link fence. So why are we still believing Fauci when he tells us to wear a mask? Easy. It's fear mongering from Democrats and the Mainstream Media. It's massive exploitation of a virus for political purposes. In this case, it's the politics of Communism.

We applaud Texas and Mississippi governors for returning their states to Freedom. We give Kristi Noem, Governor of South Dakota, a Standing Ovation!! South Dakota is the only state in America that didn't order a single business or church to be closed. They never instituted a shelter in place order, and they never ordered anyone to wear a mask.

At CPAC, Kristi Noem stated: "Dr. Fauci said to me, that on our worst day we'd have 10,000 patients in the hospital. On our worst day, we had a little over 600. Now, I don't know if you agree with me, but Dr. Fauci is WRONG A LOT."

He's not wrong by mistake. He's wrong on purpose.

Legal team wants 'second Nuremberg tribunal' to try global lockdown promoters for crimes against humanity

By Reiner Fuellmiche

Should the technocrats who pushed governments to lockdown their citizens be tried for crimes against humanity?

One prominent German lawyer, who is also licensed to practice law in America, thinks they should. And he is organizing a team of thousands of participating lawyers who want to prosecute a "second Nuremberg tribunal" against a cadre of international elites responsible for what he calls the "corona fraud scandal."

Targeting the Davos, Switzerland-based World Economic Forum and its devotees among global political leaders, attorney Reiner Fuellmich says they are guilty of crimes against humanity for their perpetration of COVID-response policies that led to forced shutdowns, destroyed businesses, impoverished families, broken lives and a spike in suicide rates.

He has formed the German Corona Investigative Committee to pursue

Steve's Say . . .

Before You Attack, Research for Yourself

Nothing attracts know-it-alls and false accusers like putting yourself forward in search of the truth. Besides the typical run-of-the-mill leftist trolls and fascist BLM/Antifa/Teacher's union bullies and supporters, many normally reserved independent and mostly conservatively aligned individuals cannot free themselves from the "conspiracy theory" thought prison built from the mainstream media (MSM) and other Deep State propaganda sources. All of these divergent interrogators share in common an involuntary assignment of credibility to sources with firmly established histories of lies, deception and altered content. And almost all have done little or no research on their own into the actual issue which they so strongly dismiss out of hand.

Leftist bombard all truth tellers with horrific labels like white supremacist, racist, climate denier, anti-science and many others, all the opposite of reality. But when non-leftists dismiss outright a reasoned opinion or some researched evidence contradicting a mainstream or consensus viewpoint they hold, that becomes disturbing. Once you've learned that you've been lied to about something you held to be firmly true at one time, it ought to open up your mind to re-examining all aspects of the world around you.

So I will keep this Steve's Say short and sweet: Please research the following terms and establish a firm understanding of what they are and what they mean to you today:

Great Awakening, Great Reset, One World Order, New World Order, Gesara, Nasara, Adrenochrome, Isis, Nicola Tesla, The Sound of Freedom

Now go find out who these people are, what they do, and how they fit in with your world today:

Juan O'Savin, Dr. Charlie Ward, L.T. (andweknow.com), Jim Caviezel, Tim Ballard, Mel K, Jennifer Eason, Scott McKay (Patriot Streetfighter), Ann Vandersteel, Robert David Steel, Pryme Minister, Krystal Tini, Dr. Rashid Buttar, Richard Citizen Journalist, Simon Parkes

Once you've explored these pathways you will find yourself going down all sorts of rabbit holes and begin to see what's really going on in the world today and what's been happening all along. And you will be shocked. I guarantee it.

And the real question will be, "Are you ready to handle the truth?"

Now extricate yourself from all MSM for the rest of your life. You'll be alot happier and alot wiser with alot more time to pursue the truly worthy things in life.

Satan's Frequency

One night just before bed while reading something about the various frequency of things, I asked myself, "What's Satan's frequency?" It kinda seemed like an absurd question but just for the heck of it I did an internet search and found the following piece. Tell me God didn't lead me to this one!

The Spirit of God says, "Why are you tuned into the enemy's frequency? Why aren't you tuned into mine? Why do you listen to the doom and gloom? Do you not realize that they are tuned into the enemy's airwaves? I said go through out all the earth and preach my gospel, the good news! Then why is there so much doom and gloom? Why are you siding and agreeing with the enemies plans? Repent! You give more airtime to the enemies plans than mine, thus empowering his plans. Did I not say that life and death are in the power of the tongue? Then speak life! Why are my leaders searing the consciousness of my people with doom and gloom teaching? You who preach doom and gloom are robbing my people of hope and the will to fight. You are no longer saving lives but taking them. How you might ask? Your doom and gloom messages have robbed them of hope to the point of suicide! You prophets and pastors of doom and gloom now have blood on your hands! You are prophesying your own doom! Repent!"

The Spirit of God says, "The news media, the news media, you have become a stench unto my nostrils, there is no spirit of truth in you. I the Lord God will clean out the news media and bring back truth. The sign will be given when news outlets will go down, bankrupt, and I the Lord God will rebuild them using my righteous people to restore them. I am calling on my Army, those who are chosen to be journalists, investors, to get ready to take your place as I tear down and rebuild my news media."

The Spirit of God says, "Where are my billionaires and millionaires? Why are you not buying out these news outlets and taking control? That money I gave you was for my kingdom, to advance my kingdom in all areas of influence. Now is the time to move into my news media! I will now take back what belongs to me using my Army and the finances I have given them. Rise up my Army and take back my news media so the spirit of truth will begin to flow. This is a fight the enemy does not want to see, he has held this stronghold for too long and his time is up. Take this fight to the enemy and my Army will be victorious and my media will be brought back to me."

The Gates of Hell (or Heaven) in Africa?

By Duggan Flanakin

Agribusiness, Small Family Farms, or Both?

According to many critics, Western billionaires do not make the best farmers. Perhaps it is their inability (or unwillingness) to downsize grandiose plans from a Western-style agribusiness model to merely helping millions of subsistence farmers that dot the African landscape succeed in providing nutritious diets for their families and communities.

That's the conclusion of a major report from Germany entitled False Promises: The Alliance for a Green Revolution in Africa (AGRA), the billion-dollar endeavor led by the Bill and Melinda Gates and Rockefeller Foundations. Project coordinators Lena Bassermann and Jan Urhahn credit Timothy A. Wise, Senior Research Fellow at Tuft University's Global Development and Environment Institute, for the research that supported many of their conclusions.

Indian development economist Jayati Ghosh praised the False Promises report in a scathing condemnation of the Green Revolution published in October. Ghosh, citing a July UN Food and Agricultural Organization report that showed a 10 percent increase in global hunger since 2014, argued that the global food system was already badly broken before the 2020 COVID pandemic.

Bassermann and Urhahn asserted that the AGRA model of input-intensive agriculture has failed to reach large numbers of small-scale food producers effectively. They urged governments to abandon political and financial support for AGRA and instead begin funding programs that help small-scale producers.

Coauthor Jan Urhahn, writing in the far-left Jacobin magazine, said that Africans should eschew the Green Revolution and practice "agroecology," which makes conscious use of nature and natural processes to promote the kinds of soil-building practices that they argue become impossible when Green Revolution technologies are used.

Since its founding in 2006, AGRA has invested in programs that support the use of high-yielding commercial seeds, synthetic fertilizers, and chemical pesticides (all of which must be purchased by farmers) and the use of monocropping to increase yields per acre. AGRA issued grants of more than $500 million to promote this vision of a "modernized" African agriculture.

As Malaysian economist Jomo Kwame Sundaram explained, AGRA had promised that countries using their methods would double productivity and incomes for 30 million small-scale farming households and cut food insecurity in half by 2020. To entice farmers to literally "buy" into the program, at least ten African governments matched the AGRA grants with sizable outlays via "Form of Input Subsidy Programs" (FISPs).

These FISP grants helped farmers pay for hybrid seeds and synthetic fertilizers – and monocropping – that AGRA promotes. But False Promises condemns AGRA for allowing some 30,000 "agro-preneurs" to decide what crops farmers should grow and thus endangering the rights of small-scale food producers to self-determination and food sovereignty.

False Promises further claims that AGRA has yet to present reliable estimates of the number of small-scale food producer households reached, improvements in their yields, household net incomes or food security, or its progress in achieving its own ambitious goals. The Bill and Melinda Gates Foundation, they claim, has been equally silent. This lack of accountability and oversight, they contended, is ASTOUNDING for a program that for so long has driven Africa's agricultural development policies.

AGRA President Agnes Kalibata, a principal target of AGRA critics, in a recent article painted a very different picture. Kalibata, a former minister of agriculture in Rwanda, sounded like her critics in asserting that, "Most of the big mistakes in development have happened when external actors have foisted their ideas and ideologies on the continent."

African farmers, she continued, "deserve the same opportunities enjoyed by farmers in Europe and North America. They do not want to be stuck with 40-year-old seed varieties," and boasted of 90 percent adoption rates for new seeds in Nigeria and Burkina Faso. AGRA, she noted, has helped establish over 110 African seed companies that provide 700,000 metric tons of seeds to 20 million out of Africa's 45 million farmers.

But she had no answers for the lack of progress other than to state that, "Inclusive agriculture transformation is not a quick fix," and to seek another $25 to $35 billion a year of investments to transform African agriculture into the AGRA model.

The Gates-Rockefeller team sought through AGRA to inject modern agribusiness practices into Africa that had previously been eschewed by Western decision makers. The problem is that their methods were not well suited to ensure that their promises would be kept – and, perhaps, that they promised too much too soon. Perhaps they failed to plan for both agribusiness and small-scale family farming. Perhaps, though, they are learning from their mistakes.

The Western billionaires who founded AGRA and set its course would have done well to learn from history. In 2009, Pater Hazell commemorated the passing of Green Revolution architect and Nobel Prize winner Norman Borlaug in an article examining how Borlaug's vision turned Asian farming economies around.

Hazell defended the Green Revolution against claims that indigenous technologies in combination with "good practices" would have done a better job of feeding Asia (just as False Promises says would be better for Africa). He asserted that in the early 1960s famine was looming across much of Asia in the early 1960s and that Asian farmers were ill-equipped to meet that challenge.

The introduction of Borlaug's high-yield wheat and rice, however, led to a doubling of cereal production from 1970 to 1995. Thus, despite a 60 percent increase in population, cereal and calorie availability per person increased by 30 percent as wheat and rice prices dropped. Hazell also said that most small farms successfully adopted Green Revolution technologies, though at a slower pace than larger scale producers.

But Hazell was also quick to point out weaknesses in the Asian approach that could well be applied to Africa today. In Asia, equitable distribution of land, together with government support of small-scale operations, was essential to small farmer gains, as inequalities worsened in regions where this support did not exist. The focus on monoculture led to the loss of many traditional plant varieties, and in some places poor irrigation and drainage practices ruined prime farmland.

African nations, Hazell admitted, were facing other obstacles to rapid Green Revolution success, notably the lack of rural infrastructure (highways, electric grids) that saddle African farmers with high costs for transportation and marketing, as well as for seeds, fertilizer, and pesticides. Thus, Hazell concluded, Africa must not merely copy the Asian model and shift to high-input, high-output farming. The Gates-Rockefeller team, according to False Promises, did not heed Hazell's warning, and thereby betrayed small farmers in their push toward an agribusiness model.

Despite the widespread catcalls to ditch the entire AGRA initiative, there is still a decade for African nations to meet the UN's sustainable development goals for agriculture. Kalibata has promised an African-centered approach to the Green Revolution, one that focuses on the farmer while scaling up inputs to reach maximum yields.

Fifty years ago, many feared that the American family farm would soon be history as a result of growing agribusiness consolidation. Today, family farms (including wineries), augmented by a growing farmers' market subculture, are in many places thriving alongside agribusiness giants. It is possible to implement an agriculture program that provides sufficient resources for both large-scale agrobusinesses and small-scale, diversified family farms. It is the either-or approach that endangers Africa's future.

Seven Truths about Climate Change that You're Not Being Told

The world is in the midst of a long-drawn-out trial. The accused? Mankind. The accusation? Threatening the planet with destruction by using fossil fuels for the energy we need to thrive. The prosecution? The global green movement and politicians allied with it—including many who see a guilty verdict as the path to global government. The witnesses: thousands of climate scientists.

In this trial, as in any other, witnesses are supposed to swear to tell the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth.

But a lot of these witnesses are telling lies and half-truths and suppressing inconvenient truths.

S. Fred Singer, in the just-released third edition of his extraordinary book Hot Talk, Cold Science, plays, if you will, attorney for the defense. He figuratively cross-examines the witnesses. In the process, he uncovers their lies, half-truths, and suppressed truths. The result should be a verdict of "Not guilty!"

Here are seven truths the prosecution doesn't want the jury—the public and policymakers—to know. Contrary to the prosecutions' claims

"Severe storms and hurricanes …, as well as precipitation, appear to have diminished in the past fifty years."

"Global agriculture has benefited already from increased CO2 and will continue to benefit from possible climate warming and increased precipitation …."

"The spread of disease vectors, like malaria-carrying mosquitoes, will be unimportant in comparison to the growth in human vectors" (that is, in the numbers and mobility of people who can spread disease over wide distances).

"Historical evidence supports the idea that warmer climate intervals

An in-depth look at climate alarmism - "Revenge of the D Students

Dr. Willie Soon

The Martinz Critical Review

The MARTINZ Critical Review …

In today's episode we continue our investigation into the actual science behind the Earth's ever changing climate, and seek to provide clear evidence to counter the bogus mainstream narrative. As our previous guest Dr. Richard Linzden has declared, climate alarmists are pursuing their "Revenge of the D Students".

Today we are very fortunate to have Dr. Willie Soon, an renown astrophysicist and geoscientist, and a leading authority on the relationship between solar phenomena and global climate. Dr. Soon earned his bachelor's and master's degrees in Science and a Ph.D. in aerospace engineering from the University of Southern California

Dr. Soon is an astrophysicist at the Solar, Stellar and Planetary Sciences Division of the Harvard-Smithsonian Center for Astrophysics, a position he has held since 1997. He has served as receiving editor for New Astronomy from 2002-2016, the contributing editor for Environment & Climate News from 1997 to 2000, and as an astronomer at the Mount Wilson Observatory from 1992-2009. He is also a policy advisor to The Heartland Institute.

His discoveries challenge computer modellers and advocates who consistently underestimate solar influences on cloud formation, ocean currents, and wind that cause climate to change. He has faced and risen above unethical and often libelous attacks on his research and his character, becoming one of the world's most respected and influential voices for climate realism.

Dr Soon has earned numerous awards during his career, and has been a prolific author of scientific literature. Dr. Soon's honors include a 1989 IEEE Nuclear and Plasma Sciences Society Graduate Scholastic Award and a Rockwell Dennis Hunt Scholastic Award from the University of Southern California for the most representative Ph.D. research thesis of 1991.

In 2003, Dr. Soon received the Smithsonian Institution (Smithsonian Astrophysical Observatory) Award in official recognition of work performance reflecting a high standard of accomplishment. In 2004, Soon received the Petr Beckmann award for courage and achievement in defense of scientific truth and freedom from the Doctors for Disaster Preparedness. In 2014, Dr. Soon received the Courage in Defense of Science Award from the George Marshall Institute. In 2017 he received the Frederick Seitz Memorial Award from the Science and Environmental Policy Project.

Dr. Soon is the author of The Maunder Minimum and the Variable Sun-Earth Connection (World Scientific Publishing Company, 2004). He is the coauthor, with Sebastian Lüning, of "Chapter 2: Solar Forcing of Climate" in Climate Change Reconsidered II: Physical Science; the author of "Sun Shunned" in Climate Change: The Facts 2014; and coauthor, with S. Baliunas, of "A brief review of the sun-climate connection, with a new insight concerning water vapour" in Climate Change: The Facts 2017.

What to do about increasing clashes between lions and humans?

By Craig Rucker

CFACT is working with African lion conservationist Patricia Vaughn to put a solution into action.

"Lions, hungry for a quick meal, are feeding on villages' livestock in Tanzania and Kenya with increasing frequency. Livestock is highly valuable in Africa, and when lions snag a goat or cow, quite often the village embarks on what are known as a 'revenge killings.' These revenge killings, unfortunately, wipe out entire prides of lions, as villagers will sometime place out poison on an animal carcass to quickly kill any predators nearby."

CFACT helped Vaughn procure and to "set up light fixtures that strobe in a fashion that makes the lions stay away. The lights are small enough so that they can be powered by solar for up to five years, meaning there is no extra burden on the limited electricity generation in many of these areas. As soon as the lights are set up, lion appearances diminished significantly."

Finding ways for people and Africa's unique and precious wildlife to coexist happily side by side is a challenge.

The lesson learned from advanced nations such as the United States is this: freedom and prosperity are the way to go.

Competitive markets and private property rights enable people to achieve prosperity and an efficient food supply. Free markets lead to economies of scale which allow more food to be produced on less land. Vast lands can then be returned to a state of nature and wildlife can more easily roam free.

American wildlife has experienced just such a massive rebound.

Africa deserves no less.

For nature and people too.

Pope Francis: Another 'great flood' possible due to global warming

By Art Moore

If humanity fails to turn the tide of "global warming," it may experience a second "great flood," warns Pope Francis.

"God's wrath is directed against injustice, against Satan," the pope says in a book set for release Tuesday titled "Of Vices and Virtues."

"It is directed against evil, not that which derives from human weakness, but evil of Satanic inspiration: the corruption generated by Satan," he writes in an advance excerpt published by the Italian daily Corriere della Sera Sunday, reported Breitbart News.

"God's wrath is meant to bring justice, to 'clean up,'" he writes.

The pontiff notes the Bible "says that the flood is the result of God's wrath."

"It is a figure of God's wrath, who according to the Bible has seen too many bad things and decides to obliterate humanity."

He says the "biblical flood, according to experts, is a mythical tale," adding he hopes that no one writes that "the pope says the Bible is a myth."

"But myth is a form of knowledge," he explains. "The flood is a historical tale, archaeologists say, because they found traces of a flood in their excavations."

He warns: "A great flood, perhaps due to a rise in temperature and the melting of the glaciers, is what will happen now if we continue along the same path."

"God unleashed his wrath, but he saw a righteous one, took him and saved him," he says. "The story of Noah demonstrates that God's wrath is also salvific."

Last year, the pope told a gathering at the Vatican it's clear that climate change is to blame for a number of humanity's social ills.

"It is evident that climate change not only upsets the balance of nature, but causes poverty and hunger, affects the most vulnerable, and sometimes forces them to leave their land," he said.

"We need a real will to tackle the root causes of the ongoing climate upheavals," Francis said. "Generic commitments are not enough — words, words."

In June 2015, Francis issued an encyclical, his second, on climate titled "Laudato Si," or "Praise be to you my Lord." He attributed global warming to human activity and accused the global market of plundering the Earth at the expense of the poor. He followed up with guidance that included calling on Catholics to divest themselves of investments in fossil fuel companies.

In his third encyclical, in 2020, he declared the coronavirus pandemic proved that the "magic theories" of market capitalism have failed and the world needs new systems that promote equality and unity.

Francis asserted it should be clear that it is not enough to "refine" existing systems.

He charged that the "perverse" global economic system keeps the poor on the margins while enriching the few.

He opposes a right to property for individuals, contending a "social purpose" and common good must come from sharing the Earth's resources.

In November 2018, as WND reported, progressive filmmaker Michael Moore claimed Francis told him capitalism is a sin and urged Moore to continue making his left-leaning documentaries.

Biden Calls Climate Change an "Existential Threat." How Do We Know He's Wrong?

E. Calvin Beisner

On January 27 last year, Joe Biden tweeted, "Climate change poses an existential threat to our future …." Precisely a year later, one week after he took office as President, in a speech at the White House, he repeated the claim.

But is climate change really an existential threat? What, after all, is an "existential threat"?

Dictionary.com says it is "a threat to something's very existence—when the continued being of something is at stake or in danger. It is used to describe threats to actual living things as well to nonliving thing things, such as a country or an ideology."

In reality, climate change not only isn't an existential threat—it isn't even the greatest environmental threat facing humanity and the world. (Let alone threats from warfare in a world in which nine nations have nuclear weapons!)

Unlike Biden, Daniel B. Botkin is one of the world's foremost ecologists. In his book 25 Myths that Are Destroying the Environment, Botkin calls nine environmental issues more important than climate change: energy, habitat destruction, invasive species, endangered species threatened now, forests, fisheries, freshwater, toxic substances, pollution, and phosphorus and other essential minerals.

How can we measure just how much of a threat climate change is? One good way is to look at measures of environmental factors that are important to the wellbeing of humanity and the biosphere in general.

Indur M. Goklany, an environmental economist retired after a long career with the U.S. Department of the Interior, does just that in his new study, Impacts of Climate Change: Perception and Reality.

Goklany, a friend of mine, compares real-world observations about trends in extreme weather events, area burned by wildfires, climate-related diseases, food and hunger, sea-level rise and land loss, human wellbeing, and terrestrial biology with claims made by climate-alarmist scientists, the media, and politicians.

He shows that in every instance, real-world observations at the global scale show either stable or improving conditions—precisely the opposite of the claims. His conclusions are supported by peer-reviewed publications.

This is one of the most important publications in the climate debate. It's something that should go into the hands of every science or social studies teacher in our public and private schools. Every parent should have it ready at hand to calm the fears of students frightened by biased in-class instruction.

original Times' article:

A continuing rise in average global sea level, which is likely to amount to more than a foot and a half by the year 2100. This, say the scientists, would inundate parts of many heavily populated river deltas and the cities on them, making them uninhabitable, and would destroy many beaches around the world. At the most likely rate of rise, some experts say, most of the beaches on the East Coast of the United States would be gone in 25 years. They are already disappearing at an average of 2 to 3 feet a year.

The date of the article is September 18, 1995. The headline reads, "Scientists Say Earth's Warming Could Set Off Wide Disruptions."

So here we are 25 full years later, a whole quarter of a century later, and the first prediction from these unnamed "experts" has not even come close to occurring, so why should we believe the dire predictions about the year 2100?

We shouldn't.

Here's something else that didn't happen…

Despite these "expert" predictions, and despite the fact tons of leftists live on the East Coast, and despite the fact leftists claim to believe Global Warming is real, in 1995, there was no panicked exodus by those who live on the East Coast. If you believe Global Warming is real… If you believe the "experts"… Why would you not immediately sell your beach house before the rising tide destroyed your multi-million dollar investment?

But what happened is the exact opposite. The population along the East Coast has only gone up over the last 25 years, property values have gone up. Which tells you that no one believed — despite the "experts" and their own claims to believe "experts" — that the East Coast because would be gone by now.

So if they don't believe the "experts," why should anyone else?

Finally, allow me to close with this…

When people ask me why I don't believe in Global Warming or Climate Change or whatever it's being called today, my answer is a very simple one…

"If I told you to sell your house because my 'expert' calculations told me your home was in danger of being hit by a meteor, how many times would I have to be wrong before you stopped selling your house in a panic? Once? Twice? Ten times?"

"At some point," I continue, "you would become skeptical of my predictions and my 'expertise.' At some point you would become incredulous. At some point you would stop believing me, then you would start laughing at me, than you would think I was lying to push some sort of agenda."

I close my answer with this: "What if I made 43 predictions and all 43 of my predictions were wrong? Would you ever believe another word I said? Would you believe prediction number 44?"

"No, of course not," my Global Warming believer answers.

"Okay," I then say, "that's why I don't believe in Global Warming. Because over the course of my life, America's climate/weather/government/environmental "experts" are 0-43 when it comes to predictions of some sort of environmental catastrophe, which tells me they are full of shit and pursing an agenda.

If someone is 0-43 with their predictions, only a fool would believe prediction number 44."

And now, with this 1995 New York Times piece, we know America's "experts" are 0-44, which means they know nothing and Global Warming or Climate Change or whatever these liars are calling it to today.

Global Warming is a total hoax, a means to scare us into giving away our freedoms to horrible elites and liars.

Only a fool would believe anyone with a 0-44 record about anything.

Don't be a fool.

COVID Numbers Are Crashing, So Why Won't State And National Leaders Change Course?

Don't look now, but COVID-19 rates are crashing faster than the narrative that American society needs to remain closed. In both Wisconsin and across the country, new infections, hospitalizations, and deaths have all dropped precipitously since their highs late fall and early winter, yet public policy remains frustratingly the same—and very well could be until the end of this year.

Wisconsin appears to have hit its peak in mid-November, when the 7-day average of new daily cases hit 6,850. This week it dropped more than 91 percent to an average of just 610 case per day over the past week. On November 17, the state hit a high with 2,277 COVID patients in the hospital and a total of 431 in intensive care. On February 28, hospitalization numbers dropped nearly 88 percent to 290, while ICU patients dropped 83 percent to just 73.

COVID-related deaths, too, have cratered from a high of 128 on January 28 to none on either February 28 or March 1. This is somewhat misleading since deaths are often not counted until after a weekend, and there were 28 deaths reported on March 2. This represents a 78 percent drop from January. A better metric for measuring deaths is the 7-day average since the number of daily deaths is somewhat random, and Wisconsin hit a high of 61 deaths per day on December 7. Today, that 7-day average has dropped 67 percent to 20 per day.

This trend fits with the national statistics, which show that COVID-19 cases, hospitalizations, and deaths have all fallen off of a cliff since their highs in early January. Total cases dropped 81 percent from their high on January 8 to Monday's total of about 56,000. The 7-day average, meanwhile, has dropped 74 percent. The 7-day average number of hospitalizations has dropped 61 percent from its high on January 13. Deaths are down 39 percent.

All of this is undoubtedly good news, as it suggests that the worst of the pandemic is past. Policymakers at both the state and national level, though, are largely refusing to change course.

"My hope is by this time next year, we're going to be back to normal and before that [is] my hope," President Biden said Tuesday… while announcing that by the end of May every American who wants a COVID vaccine would be able to get one.

So why is the President talking about keeping the country at least partially closed when all of the available data suggests that the country can reopen much earlier? One researcher with the Johns Hopkins Bloomberg School of Public Health even believes that the United States might achieve what's known as "herd immunity" within the next couple of months.

"It does look like, based on the current trajectory, that come April or May, we're going to start seeing very low background levels of infection," Dr. Marty Makary said last week.

The combination of increasing vaccination rates with more natural immunity from prior infections will at some point all but eliminate COVID-19 as a major public health threat. This day seems to be coming sooner rather than later, but here in Wisconsin, Governor Evers is openly talking about extending his never-ending public health emergency (and the mask mandate that goes along with it) until Christmas.

This stands in stark contrast with Mississippi, whose Republican Governor Tate Reeves just repealed his state's mask mandate and Texas, whose Republican Governor Greg Abbott ended his state's mask mandate and business capacity limits. Texas' 7-day average of new cases is down 66 percent from its peak in early January, while Mississippi's is down nearly 76 percent.

Neither of these states even comes close to Wisconsin's 91 percent drop, but their Governors recognize what Governor Evers and President Biden do not: America can and should start to reopen. New cases are plummeting, and hospitalizations and deaths along with them. The data couldn't possibly be clearer. The science, as they say, appears to be settled.

are beneficial for human activities, food production, and health."

"Mitigation techniques are available that can slow down the rise of atmospheric [greenhouse gases] and possible climate change" including energy conservation and efficiency, hydro and nuclear power; and more.

"Tree planting and ocean fertilization may be low-cost methods of sequestering atmospheric CO2" if that turns out desirable.

"Attempting to mitigate climate change by imposing mandatory controls on energy use can create economic losses, harming especially poor people and poor nations, that exceed the possible benefits by orders of magnitude. … Adaptation … is generally superior to both mitigation and sequestration."

By reading Hot Talk, Cold Science, you can learn to explain and defend these truths in conversation with others.

Fred Singer: The third edition of the popular book by the late Fred Singer; Hot Talk, Cold Science; has been released by the Independent Institute. It features updated and expanded sections by David Legates and Anthony Lupo. William Happer has a forward in addition to that by the late Frederick Seitz.

Accompanying the book's release, David Theroux, Founder, President and Chief Executive Officer of the Independent Institute, wrote a tribute to Singer summarizing Singer's major scientific accomplishment and the personal friendship Theroux had with Singer. It is an appropriate tribute for this man of highly diverse talents. See links under Challenging the Orthodoxy.

CO2 - Aerosol Balancing Act: Last week's TWTW discussed how the major climate models used by the UN Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change (IPCC) are manipulated using the cooling effect of aerosols with the warming effect of carbon dioxide (CO2) to achieve a IPCC's desired balance with the surface temperature record (which is already manipulated) to claim that adding carbon dioxide will have a significant impact on surface temperatures.

The result of this manipulation is Equilibrium Climate Sensitivity (ECS) for a doubling of CO2. Since the climate has never been stable (in equilibrium) their quest is questionable. [As used in this sense, aerosols are fine solid particles or liquid droplets suspended in the atmosphere that may be natural or human caused (anthropogenic). Examples of natural aerosols are volcanic emissions, fog, mist, dust, organic compounds released by vegetation, smoke form wildfires, etc. Examples of anthropogenic aerosols are particulate air pollutants, smoke from power plants and industrial processes. In the US and Western Europe, anthropogenic aerosols have been largely eliminated. In Asia and other developing regions, they remain a problem.]

In correspondence, UK's Richard Courtney stated:

"None of the climate models – not one of them – could match the change in mean global temperature over the past century if it did not utilise a unique value of assumed cooling from aerosols. So, inputting actual values of the cooling effect (such as the determination by Penner et al.) would make every climate model provide a mismatch of the global warming it hindecasts and the observed global warming for the twentieth century.

"This mismatch would occur because all the global climate models and energy balance models are known to provide indications which are based on.

1. the assumed degree of forcings resulting from human activity that produce warming and

2. the assumed degree of anthropogenic aerosol cooling input to each model as a 'fiddle factor' to obtain agreement between past average global temperature and the model's indications of average global temperature.

"More than two decades ago I published a peer-reviewed paper that showed the UK's Hadley Centre general circulation model (GCM) could not model climate and only obtained agreement between past average global temperature and the model's indications of average global temperature by forcing the agreement with an input of assumed anthropogenic aerosol cooling. And my paper demonstrated that the assumption of aerosol effects being responsible for the model's failure was incorrect. [Boldface in original]

Courtney then discusses a 2007 paper by Jeffrey Kiehl, a colleague of Kevin Trenberth at the National Center for Atmospheric Research located in Boulder, Colorado. Courtney states:

"More recently but also long ago, in 2007, Kiehl published a paper that assessed 9 GCMs and two energy balance models.

"Kiehl found the same as my paper except that each model he assessed used a different aerosol 'fix' from every other model."

"Kiehl says in his paper:

"'One curious aspect of this result is that it is also well known [Houghton et al., 2001] that the same models that agree in simulating the anomaly in surface air temperature differ significantly in their predicted climate sensitivity. The cited range in climate sensitivity from a wide collection of models is usually 1.5 to 4.5 deg C for a doubling of CO2, where most global climate models used for climate change studies vary by at least a factor of two in equilibrium sensitivity.

The question is: if climate models differ by a factor of 2 to 3 in their climate sensitivity, how can they all simulate the global temperature record with a reasonable degree of accuracy? Kerr [2007] and S. E. Schwartz et al. (Quantifying climate change–too rosy a picture? available at http://www.nature.com/reports/climatechange, 2007) recently pointed out the importance of understanding the answer to this question. Indeed, Kerr [2007] referred to the present work and the current paper provides the ''widely circulated analysis'' referred to by Kerr [2007]. This report investigates the most probable explanation for such an agreement. It uses published results from a wide variety of model simulations to understand this apparent paradox between model climate responses for the 20th century, but diverse climate model sensitivity.'

"And, importantly, Kiehl's paper says:

"'These results explain to a large degree why models with such diverse climate sensitivities all can simulate the global anomaly in surface temperature. The magnitude of applied anthropogenic total forcing compensates for the model sensitivity.'

'And the 'magnitude of applied anthropogenic total forcing' is fixed in each model by the input value of aerosol forcing.

It shows that.

(a) each model uses a different value for "Total anthropogenic forcing" that is in the range 0.80 W/m^-2 to 2.02 W/m^-2 but

(b) each model is forced to agree with the rate of past warming by using a different value for "Aerosol forcing" that is in the range -1.42 W/m^-2 to -0.60 W/m^-2.

"In other words, the models use values of "Total anthropogenic forcing" that differ by a factor of more than 2.5 and they are 'adjusted' by using values of assumed "Aerosol forcing" that differ by a factor of 2.4.

"In summation, it has been known for decades that all the 'indications' of ECS generated by climate models are artefacts of assumed aerosol effects input to the models, i.e., GIGO. [Garbage In Garbage Out, Boldface in original]

As Courtney discusses, for decades global climate modelers, including the finest in the US, have manipulated data to achieve a predetermined high sensitivity of surface temperatures to changing atmospheric carbon dioxide (ECS). All the key components are in the atmosphere, CO2, aerosols, and the greenhouse effect. Yet the modelers ignore measurements of the atmosphere including temperature trends. Nature does not obey global climate models, so the politicized modelers ignore Nature and abandon the scientific method as well. See links under Model Issues:

More Balancing Act: Adding to the balancing act, the Global Warming Policy Forum (GWPF) discusses a paper from Princeton University published in Geophysical Research Letters. This paper examined the latest models designed to be used by the UN Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change. The abstract states:

"The most recent generation of climate models (the 6th Phase of the Coupled Model Intercomparison Project) yields estimates of effective climate sensitivity (ECS) that are much higher than past generations due to a stronger amplification from cloud feedback. If plausible, these models require substantially larger greenhouse gas reductions to meet global warming targets. We show that models with a more positive cloud feedback also have a stronger cooling effect from aerosol cloud interactions. These two effects offset each other during the historical period when both aerosols and greenhouse gases increase, allowing either more positive or neutral cloud feedback models to reproduce the observed global mean temperature change. Since anthropogenic aerosols primarily concentrate in the Northern Hemisphere, strong aerosol cloud interaction models produce an interhemispheric asymmetric warming. We show that the observed warming asymmetry during the mid to late 20th century is more consistent with low ECS (weak aerosol indirect effect) models.' [Boldface added]

As summarized by the GWPF:

"The authors' most important scientific result is that the mild models seem better at reproducing the Earth's recent temperature history. Most 20th century pollution was emitted in the north, so the balance between greenhouse gas warming and cloud-aerosol cooling has been different between the two hemispheres. This gives us an opportunity to assess whether the strong models are more realistic than the mild ones. That's because the strong models give a much more pronounced difference between the hemispheres. Unfortunately for climate alarmists, Wang reckons that the observed difference is a much better match with the mild models. This means that predictions of a very hot future are much less plausible.

"Amusingly, Wang and his colleagues imply that there seems to be a surprising match between the amount of cooling and heating in the overall model cohort.

Number of the Week: 5.28 billion tonnes (11,640 billion pounds). Among the many ideas proposed by those who wish to save the world from mythological "dangerous global warming" is the concept of Carbon Capture and Storage (CCS). According to "Our World in Data," in 2019, the US emitted 5.28 billion tonnes (11,640 billion pounds) of carbon dioxide. No one has any idea of what it would take to capture, compress, and place into permanent storage this amount of carbon dioxide.

Similarly, no one has any idea of the costs involved in the UK government's position of "net zero." Apparently, nothing is meaningful for many politicians except being re-elected, regardless of any relation to actual, verifiable science. The costs of claims of imaginary powers are a problem for the future. Humanity needs protection from these myths. The Science & Environmental Policy Project began in late 1990 as a research effort by atmospheric physicist S. Fred Singer and a handful of graduate students working out of a small office in downtownWashington, D.C.The Project had two goals: (1) to gather material for a book on global environmental issues,and (2) to conduct a survey of scientists affiliated with the UN Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change to determine the extent of what was, even then, being touted as scientific "consensus" on global warming.

What the graduate students discovered with their survey convinced Dr. Singer to set his book aside and instead to circulate among senior members of the American Meteorological Society a "Statement by Atmospheric Scientists" on greenhouse warming, which was quickly endorsed by 46 leading climatologists and atmospheric physicists (and eventually by nearly 100). That statement, issued on February 27, 1992, drew widespread media attention and was cited more than 150 times in the press. It was the first inkling journalists had that there was no scientific consensus on the reality of a global warming. Indeed, there was raging debate.

The Science & Environmental Policy Project was incorporated in the state of Virginia in 1992, and established as a nonprofit, 501(c)3 educational organization in late 1993.Today, having expanded from that core of 46 scientists, it draws on an international network of some of the finest minds in science who donate their time to promoting sound, credible, peer-reviewed research as the only basis for the health and environmental policies that affect us all.

You can help in two ways:

1. Download SEPP reports, press releases, and articles and pass them on – to newspaper editors, journalists, educators, civic leaders, and others. Help stop the fearmongering and the distortion of science.This is the most important thing you can do.

2. Support SEPP with your tax-deductible contributions. The environmental pressure groups, which present so much wrong information, have a combined clout of more than $1 billion a year.The Science & Environmental Policy Project has had far-reaching impact on less than one-hundredth of one percent of that figure. Social Costs cont. from page 1

special Interagency Working Group to concoct a "social cost of carbon" concept. The SCC would "scientifically" calibrate the dollar value of damages that a ton of carbon dioxide emitted today in America would inflict on the USA and world in the future.

The price tag was set at $22/ton in 2010, raised to $36/ton in 2013, and just as arbitrarily increased to $40, before finishing the Obama era at $51/ton. President Trump disbanded the IWG and had the SCC slashed to less than $10/ton. Within hours of taking office, President Biden resurrected the working group, reinstituted $51/ton as a starting point, and directed federal agencies to devise a definitive SCC by 2022.

This "updated" version will reflect "recent developments in the science and economics" of climate change, including the costs of other greenhouse gases, the White House said. It will also factor in US commitments under the Paris climate treaty, and especially "considerations of environmental justice and intergenerational equity." Climate "scientists," economists, "ethics experts" and "diverse stakeholders" will all participate in the process, which many expect will devise a final SCC of $100 or even $200/ton.

The IWG methodology for developing SCC estimates is so infinitely flexible, so devoid of any rigorous standards, that it could produce almost any estimates that Biden and his climate czars feel is needed. Adding "justice" and "equity" to the mix makes it doubly malleable, doubly prone to abuse by an administration and Democrat Party that are obsessed with "manmade climate change" (even Securities and Exchange Commission and Department of Defense appointees must be committed to ending the "climate crisis") and are determined to make America "carbon neutral" by 2050.

Social cost of carbon is intended to advance that agenda and a 981-page "CLEAN Future" billrequiring that electricity generators provide 80% carbon-free energy by 2030 and 100% "clean" power by 2035.

Right now, over 80% of all US and global energy come from fossil fuels – and China, India and other countries are building thousands of new coal-fired power plants, on top of the thousands they already have. So even total cancelation of fossil fuel use and CO2/ greenhouse gas emissions by the United States would be imperceptible and irrelevant amid the world's enormous and increasing levels of both.

Social cost of carbon is a key tactic in a war on reliable, affordable American energy; on jobs, human welfare and human rights; and on US and global lands, wildlife and environmental quality. It will be used to justify raising carbon taxes and prices to at least $160 per ton of CO2 and imposing Covid-on-steroids lockdowns every two years, supposedly to keep average global temperatures from rising more than 1.5 degrees C from pre-industrial/post Little Ice Age levels, which alarmists claim would be catastrophic.

The SCC enables agencies and their allies to attach any price they wish to every conceivable cost of using fossil fuels: hotter and colder, wetter and drier climate and weather; more frequent and intense hurricanes; reduced agricultural output; forest health and wildfires; floods, droughts and water resources; "forced migration" of people and wildlife; worsening health and disease; flooded coastal cities; even "reduced student learning and worker productivity," due to warmer planetary temperatures.

The SCC also lets practitioners completely ignore the obvious and enormous benefits of using fossil fuels, and emitting carbon dioxide – such as enhanced productivity via affordable air conditioning in summer and heating in winter; improved forest, grassland and crop growth (and greening deserts) due to more CO2 in the air; greater home and human survival rates amid extreme weather events; and having the jobs, mobility, living standards, healthcare and longevity of modern industrialized life.

In fact, hydrocarbon and carbon dioxide benefits outweigh costs by 50:1, 400:1 or even 500:1! Will Team Biden and others in the anti-hydrocarbon movement acknowledge any of this?

Unless compelled to do so by our courts, the odds are probably 500:1 against it. They won't even admit that the sun and other natural forces still play dominant roles in climate and weather, as they have throughout history. In their minds, every SCC cost is directly and solely due to fossil fuels. (For a reality check, read Indur Goklany, Patrick Moore, Gregory Wrightstone, Marc Morano and Jennifer Marohasy.)

In fact, eliminating carbon-based energy and carbon dioxide emissions will impose far greater human and ecological costs. It is fossil fuel replacements that will inflict incalculable damage to people and planet.

Replacing coal, oil, natural gas and internal combustion vehicles would require millions of wind turbines, billions of solar panels, billions of battery modules, millions of acres of biofuel plantations, a complete overhaul of electrical grids and infrastructures, on millions of acres. That will require billions of tons of steel, aluminum, copper, lithium, cobalt, rare earth elements, concrete, plastics and other materials – which will require digging up and processing hundreds of billions of tons of ores and minerals.

Under Team Biden, Democrats and Big Green, little of this will take place in the US, under our rigorous laws and regulations. It will be done overseas, in China, Mongolia, Africa, Bolivia – often with slave and child labor, and with few or no workplace safety, air and water pollution, toxic substances, endangered species or other rules. Don't their health, human rights and environmental quality mean anything?

The technologies may be clean and emission-free in the USA – but won't be in any of these countries.

Even manufacturing the turbines, panels, batteries and other technologies will be done overseas – again with few or no pollution, health, safety or fair wage rules – because expensive, unreliable, weather-dependent, blackout-prone electricity will send America's manufacturing and other basic industries into oblivion, along with millions of good jobs. Minority and blue-collar families will be hammered hardest.

The proliferation of "clean, climate-friendly" wind and solar energy will pummel wildlife and habitats. Wind turbines already slaughter a million birds and bats annually in the USA – far in excess of what Big Wind admits to – and that's from a "measly" 60,000 turbines. The same thing is happening in Europe.

With the best wind sites being along migratory bird flyways, raptor hunting grounds, bat habitats, and Great Lake and sea coasts, the slaughter will get worse with every passing year. I just put new bluebird, hummingbird and wood duck nest houses around my home and neighborhood. It is terribly depressing that such efforts in suburban areas will be overwhelmed by a tsunami of death in our wildlife kingdoms. As forests, grasslands and deserts get torn up for turbines and blanketed by solar panels and biofuel crops, mammals, reptiles, amphibians, invertebrates and wild plants will also disappear.

Team Biden, Democrats, Big Green and Big Media will loudly deny these realities. They will insist that any wildlife losses are "inadvertent." As though the wildlife are less dead because it was inadvertent; as though negligible inadvertent deaths from fossil fuel extraction and pipelines were bad, but these are OK.

Wind turbines, solar panels and batteries have short life spans – and are difficult or impossible to recycle. Where will we bury millions of 300-foot-long fiberglass-composite turbine blades? billions of solar panels? Will we just keep sending solar panels overseas, where parents and children burn them in open fires to recover the metals – breathing toxic fumes all day long?

This is just the tip of the iceberg of adverse impacts from SCC/Green New Deal policies. Any honest, accurate, complete social cost of carbon analysis would require that every one of them be fully accounted for, before we make any decisions on fossil fuels. Will oddsmakers even take bets on that happening?

Will courts step up to the plate? Will state attorneys general? Will Republicans become better informed about our energy lifeblood, better organized, less focused on less critical issues – and more willing to mount passionate, principled opposition to this irresponsible insanity?

Or will Democrats just ram this through, because they can, because they control the House, Senate, White House and Deep State Executive Branch – perhaps with bare 1-10 majorities, but arrogant totalitarian control nonetheless?

American Energy for the American People

"A prudent man foreseeth the evil, and hideth himself; but the simple pass on, and are punished." Proverbs 27:12

By Riley J. Hood —Milwaukee County Constitution Party

Beginning on January 21st, 2021 winter hit America for real. Below zero F Temperatures and so much snow, I was running out of places to shovel it. In February, the Polar Vortex, which I call the Obama Vortex, reached into Texas. Below zero temperatures led to a California style black out. People froze to death, and the property damage from burst plumbing etc., is still to be assessed.

Not only were Texans not prepared for the cold, they are not prepared for the utility bills either. According cnbc.com, "Houston mayor Sylvester Turner on Sunday called on the state of Texas to pay for the enormous electric bills that scores of Texans reported after severe winter weather knocked out power and spiked energy prices." CNBC adds, "Now, as power resumes for most of Texas, some households face utility bills as high as $10,000."

CNBC blames de-regulation, that isn't a quote, that is CNBC's assertion. And it is bunk, because the Electric Reliability Council of Texas, ERCOT is a regulatory board. An ERCOT rep. said, "All of what happened this past week was foreseeable and preventable. Our system in Texas is designed for summer heat and not necessarily a winter event." CNBC also blames "climate change" because these "scientific men" can't understand the difference between weather and climate, weather being short term events, and climate being patterns over longer periods of time.

Fox News reported about the frozen wind turbines, and Bill McCarthy from PolitiFact took Fox to task. McCarthy said the report "lacked context." McCarthy had to admit it wasn't a total lie, "It's true that about half of Texas' wind power capacity was shut down early in the week as some turbine blades froze over thanks to a rare blast of Arctic air." He then blamed de-regulation, while ignoring the existence of ERCOT, and saying the Green New Deal isn't federal law yet.

The fact is Fox News did miss the greater point, it isn't the lack of wind and solar, but the closure of real sources of energy such as coal, natural gas and oil. The Milwaukee County Constitution asserts that if every wind turbine was working, the system would have still been overwhelmed, because wind energy in its current state isn't the energy producer that oil or coal is.

It is a fact that while the GOP claimed energy independence, on Christmas Day 2015 Paul Ryan and the GOP in the House and Senate passed a bill, which Obama signed allowing for oil export. We have been exporting oil to China for the last five years. According to the EIA, in 2018 we were exporting 36% of our oil, and importing 48%. Importing 48% is and improvement over say 70% which was the prior experience, but that is not energy independence, when almost half your tank of gas is from overseas. Under Trump more imported oil came from Canada, as opposed to Saudi, but China Joe is shutting that down. He is probably ramping up exports to the enemy, the Peoples Republic of China. Energy independence is when 100% of our energy is produced in America, by American corporations, administered by Americans, which employ American workers.

The Brick Battery

By Viv Forbes

The Australian Snowy 2 hydro scheme plans to use electricity to pump water up hill to get some of that energy back by running the water downhill again. All to make intermittent green energy look sensible.

Some green-tinged Australian mining companies are planning a dry version of Snowy 2 - a huge brick-powered battery using the force of gravity to drive a generator when solar and wind energy are on strike.

Each unit of this brick-powered battery would comprise a 30 storey tower enclosing a 35 tonne brick which is hauled up using surplus renewable energy (around noon on any clear windy day) and then released to turn generators when there is no renewable energy being produced (every still night or calm cloudy day).

For a detailed diagram on how it will all work see:

These flint-stone miners will also have to replace all diesel mining equipment with electric machines, then build enough wind/solar generators to not only run the mine, but also to elevate the giant bricks. The country for miles around will be plastered by solar panels, wind turbines, power lines and roads. They must then build the brick-powered batteries and generators. This expensive conglomeration would be lucky to recover 50% of the energy used to create and charge it. Few mines could afford to fund all this nonsense. Shareholders can expect nothing except dividends of broken bricks. But someone will benefit from increased demand for electric mining machines, copper, steel and other metals. And foreign producers of wind turbines and solar panels will get richer.

(This complicated mess will crash at the most awkward time. Prudent mine workers should demand a diesel generator and fuel in every ventilated crib room.)

It would be better and quicker to buy a portable nuclear power plant and get reliable smoke-free 24/7 power.

Tautology and the Art of Listening

By Gary Wickert

We only hear half of what we listen to. Perhaps that is why most people instinctively use tautology—repeating the same thing twice, often in the same sentence, using different words—when they write and speak, often without even knowing that they're doing it.

Mark Twain made entertaining and sarcastic use of tautology. His most famous example is "Suppose you were an idiot and suppose you were a member of Congress. But I repeat myself." A tautology is usually considered to be an undesirable flaw in communication; an unnecessary waste of time and words. Perhaps some of you caught the tautology in the preceding sentence. Tautology tends to make you sound wordier than you need to be. In most cases, a tautology involves just a few words that mean the same thing. For example, "I went to see him personally" contains an extra and unnecessary word because the adverb "personally" repeats the idea already expressed in the single word "I". However, a tautology occasionally helps to add emphasis or clarity, or introduce intentional ambiguity. Adding the word "personally" might be intended to emphasize that the speaker's action in going to see him is most unusual and significant in and of itself. However, in most cases it's best to choose just one way to state your meaning and eliminate the extra words.

Tautology does not diminish clarity, but it should be avoided in formal writing and speaking so you don't repeat yourself repetitively. Did you catch that tautology? Phrases such as "a new innovation", the evening sunset", "hot water heater", or "frozen ice" are good examples. Hearing something "with our own ears" is the only possible way to hear. Over-exaggerating is redundant. So is a hoagie sandwich, a short summary, dilapidated ruins, predictions about the future, close proximity, 2 p.m. in the afternoon, and a necessary requirement.

Tautology is pervasive throughout our culture, and even in this sentence. Even professional speakers, politicians, and writers allow tautology to sneak silently into their work. It was President George W. Bush who famously said, "Our nation must come together to unite." The Beatles lyrics were, "There's nothing you can do that can't be done. There's nothing you can sing that can't be sung", and it was Kiss who sang, "Shout it, shout it, shout it out loud!"

Tautology infects science and technology as well. Consider DVD disc, GPS system, HIV virus, ISBN number, PIN number, please R.S.V.P., and V.I.N. number. Advertisers repeat themselves as well. Enjoy your added bonus, prepay in advance, and giving away free tickets, are examples. We unnecessarily add words when they aren't needed. Did you catch that tautology?

The unfettered use of tautology in speech and writing is perhaps related to the root cause for filler words like "Um." We have been conditioned to answer questions immediately from an early age. Thus, we abhor a vacuum and fill in blanks with "um" while we are trying to think of the next sentence. It is verbal thinking, but isn't very flattering to the listener. I always teach young lawyers that good advocacy makes effective use of the much-underrated pause.

There are times when the use of tautology is helpful to emphasize a point or to add poetic flair to the written or spoken word. Most frequently, however, a tautology doesn't add new information to a statement and merely burdens the listener. If you double the words needed to communicate effectively, it only seems natural that the listener will tune out half the words he or she hears.

American business is learning that it is tied together by its systems of communication. We are discovering that this communication depends more on the spoken word than it does on the written word; and the effectiveness of the spoken word hinges not so much on how people talk as on how they listen. Our ears function just fine; it is our brain which hasn't mastered the necessary aural listening skills needed to allow those ears to be used effectively. Catch that double tautology?

A University of Minnesota study concluded that immediately after the average person has listened to someone talk, he or she remembers only half of what has been said—no matter how carefully he or she listened. Within eight hours we have forgotten half of what we remembered. Classic education teaches reading, but places little emphasis on speaking, and none on listening. Our teachers yell, "Open your ears" or "Pay attention", but that is a poor substitute for teaching students to listen. We make the assumption that bright students listen and those who don't are unintelligent. That isn't always the case. The truth is that to be good listeners we must apply certain skills acquired only through either experience or training.

Educators are beginning to realize that listening is a skill that can be taught. In Nashville, schools have started training in listening from elementary grades through high school. At the University of Minnesota they present a course in listening to a large segment of the freshman class. I would wager that widespread inability to truly listen is also at the root of much of the political incivility which has infected our country. Most of us don't really listen very well. Or if we do manage to listen, we are often just waiting until the other person finishes so that we can say what is on OUR mind. And that's not really listening. If we all took the time to learning the art of listening, we could avoid tautology and say half as much as we feel the need to. That means we'd all be done with everything twice as fast.

Listening, not talking is the gifted and imaginative role. The true listener is much more believed and magnetic than the talker. The listener is more effective, learns more, and does more good. There is a big difference between listening and waiting for your turn to speak.

Rand Paul savages Dr. Fauci as a wannabe philosopher who spins 'noble lies'

By Jack Davis

From the heights of his intellect, Dr. Anthony Fauci looks down on Americans as he spews "noble lies," Republican Sen. Rand Paul of Kentucky said Friday.

Fauci, the director of the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases, and also a special White House adviser to President Joe Biden, has been America's chief medical authority on the virus.

Paul, who has never been a fan of Fauci's pronouncements, lashed out at Fauci during a Friday appearance on "The Ingraham Angle," according to Fox News.

In November, Fauci noted that the U.S. has an "independent spirit."

"I can understand that, but now is the time to do what you're told," he said then, according to CNBC.

Host Laura Ingraham noted that Paul was among the few who has publicly questioned Fauci, according to Ingraham's LifeZette website.

"Senator, you have been one of the few lawmakers to directly call out Dr. Fauci's lies. Are people afraid to question him? And if so, why?" Ingraham said.

"Well, it's the science — and people are afraid of, you know, scientists, and he's put on a pedestal," Paul said.

Paul then said Fauci thinks he knows more than everyone else.

"But you have to remember that his lies are noble lies, Laura. He's not telling you this because he's a mean man," Paul said.

"He's telling you this because he feels sorry for you because you don't understand, and Americans aren't smart enough to make an informed decision. So, he fashions himself some sort of Greek philosopher. He tells you these noble lies," Paul said.

Paul used Fauci's initial opposition to wearing masks to illustrate his point.

"So, at first, he told you that all the masks don't work. But he told you that because he wanted to protect the N-95 masks, which actually in a health setting do work. But then, later on, he said, all masks do work," Paul said.

"But that's also a lie also because, really only the N-95 masks work. It's a compilation of lies. But they're all done to protect you because he doesn't think you're smart enough to make any of these decisions on your own."

Paul added that the hot-button issue of lockdowns and masks and all of the other government responses to the coronavirus need an objective review to determine if anything the government did actually made a difference.

"You can sequentially look at the date when each mandate was passed and when it got ratcheted up. You can look at the incidence of the disease, and what you find is they were proportional, meaning the more mandates we got, the more disease we got," he said.

"The mandates did not cause the disease, but there is no evidence the mandate slowed down the disease at all."

civil charges against the main perpetrators, among them being the head of the United Nations World Health Organization Dr. Tedros Adhanom. He hopes a successful class-action lawsuit will also lead to criminal charges.

Fuellmich was on the legal team that won a major lawsuit against German automaker Volkswagen in a 2015 case involving tampered catalytic converters in the U.S. He also was involved in a lawsuit that exposed one of Germany's largest banks, Deutsche Bank, as a criminal enterprise. The bank was recently ordered by the U.S. Justice Department to pay $130 million to resolve corrupt practices that included money laundering, bribery and fraud between the years 2009 and 2016.

Fuellmich is licensed to practice law in Germany and the state of California.

He believes the frauds committed by Volkswagen and Deutsche Bank pale in comparison to the damage wrought by those who sold the Covid-19 crisis as the worst viral outbreak to hit the world in more than a century and used it to cause media-driven panic, government overreach and human suffering on a scale still not fully quantified.

The truth is revealed in the numbers, Fuellmich said, citing figures that show COVID-19 has not caused any statistically significant increase in the 2020 death counts over previous years.

The scam perpetrated on humanity hinged on one dirty little secret, he said – the PCR Test.

Not only are these tests not approved for diagnostic purposes but the inventor of the PCR Test, the late Kary Mullis, explicitly stated in an interview that this was never the purpose of his test.

Fuellmich explains in the video below how the coronavirus response of governments worldwide working in cahoots with the Bill Gates-funded U.N. World Health Organization "are probably the biggest crimes against humanity ever committed."

"A number of highly respected scientists [he names several in the video including a Nobel Laurette from Stanford University] have concluded there has never been a coronavirus pandemic but only a PCR test pandemic," he says.

"If someone tests positive it does not mean they are infected with anything, let alone with the contagious SARS-COV-2 virus," Fuellmich says in the video.

"Based on the rules of criminal law, asserting false facts concerning the PCR tests, or intentional misrepresentation, that can only be assessed as fraud. Based on the rules of civil tort law, this translates into intentional infliction of damage."

He said persons harmed by the PCR-induced lockdowns are entitled to full compensation for their losses.

"The crimes committed by Mr. Christian Drosten [an epidemiologist and Germany's version of Dr. Anthony Fauci] and Mr. Lothar Wieler, a veterinarian and head of the German equivalent of the CDC, and Tedros Adhanom, head of the WHO, must be legally qualified as actual crimes against humanity as defined in Section 7 of the International Criminal Code."

He said the class-action lawsuit is the best avenue to try the case.

In a Feb. 24 article about Fuellmich's effort, the journal Principia Scientific International quoted him saying "this COVID-19 crisis should be renamed the 'Covid-19 Scandal,' and all those responsible should be prosecuted for civil damages due to manipulations and falsified test protocols. Therefore, an international network of business lawyers will plead the biggest tort case of all time, the COVID-19 fraud scandal, which has meanwhile turned into the biggest crime against humanity ever committed."

Here is a summarized translation of the most-recent update Fuellmich put out on his German website on Feb. 15:

"The hearings of around 100 internationally renowned scientists, doctors, economists and lawyers, which have been conducted by the Berlin Commission of Inquiry into the COVID-19 affair since 10.07.2020, have in the meantime shown with a probability close to certainty that the COVID-19 scandal was at no time a health issue. Rather, it was about solidifying the illegitimate power (illegitimate because it was obtained by criminal methods) of the corrupt 'Davos clique' by transferring the wealth of the people to the members of the Davos clique, destroying, among other things, small and medium-sized enterprises in particular. Platforms such as Amazon, Google, Uber, etc. could thus appropriate their market share and wealth."

Was the vaccine the reason for the virus?

Perhaps the most egregious outgrowth of the coronavirus scam has been the fear-mongering that not only led to devastating and non-scientific shutdowns but also the rush to market of an unproven, experimental vaccine, which is now making billions of dollars for Big Pharma.

Just like the lockdowns, the vaccine is unnecessary because there are already several well-documented treatments involving long-established drugs that are proven safe and widely available. Also just like the lockdowns, this vaccine carries potentially devastating long-term effects on human health. There are questions about its effects on the fertility of men and women, and it has already caused more than 1,100 deaths in the U.S. and more than 400 deaths in the U.K.

To make matters worse, it is becoming plainly obvious that the intent is to make this experimental vaccine mandatory for all of humanity. It was billionaire vaccine investor Bill Gates who originally floated the idea, in April 2020, that humanity could never return to "normal" until "we have a vaccine that we've gotten out to basically the entire world."

This reporter predicted last April that the vaccine would eventually be made mandatory, largely by corporations using coercive tactics.

Israel takes the lead in instituting medical tyranny

Among the nations considered to be part of the "free world," Israel is taking the lead in pushing forward with a new type of society in which corporations and governments work together to coerce and eventually force every human being on the planet to get an injection of experimental vaccine treatments.

Not since the Nazi Third Reich has there been so little respect for citizens' rights of individual health autonomy in a Western nation.

Whether you live in America, the U.K., Australia or Europe, if you wish to see what your future holds under the "new normal," just look at Israel.

The Israeli government has announced that people will not be allowed to participate in a host of life functions without showing papers offering proof that they have either been vaccinated or that they have had and recovered from COVID.

A host of Israeli businesses including shops, malls, markets, pubs, gyms, museums, synagogues, hotels and libraries were allowed to reopen Sunday, Feb. 21, the Times of Israel reports. But only those Israelis who have been vaccinated or have recovered from COVID will be able to use gyms and pools, attend synagogues, sporting and culture events, board a flight or stay at hotels.

To be allowed to open their doors, all relevant businesses have been ordered by the government to scan their customers for the so-called "Green Pass," barring from entry anyone who cannot produce such documentation.

There are three ways for Israelis to get the Green Pass:

Downloading the Traffic Light (Ramzor) app on Google Play or the Apple App Store, entering personal details and getting the pass on one's phone.

Signing up on the Health Ministry website and downloading a printable personal document.

Calling the Health Ministry's hotline and having the pass sent by email or fax.

Europe also moving toward vaccine passports

The European Union also appears to be on the cusp of embracing similar draconian measures. German Chancellor Angela Merkel stated this week that the concept of a digital vaccine passport has achieved "unanimous support within the E.U."

"Everyone agreed that we need a digital vaccination certificate," Merkel said last Wednesday after a meeting with European leaders.

E.U. Commission President Ursula von der Leyen also praised Israel's new Green Pass system.

The Telegraph reports that the government of the U.K. is nearing an announcement of new rules similar to Israel's in which no Brit will be allowed to enter pubs, gyms, large-venue events or hotels without showing their special COVID vaccine passport.

Since when do we take away freedom in order to restore it under a new set of terms defined by unelected "experts" at the United Nations World Health Organization? This is the twisted way in which the globalist technocrats think. Always perverting the language to sell their lies and enticing ill-informed masses to walk straight into their devious traps.

Forcing people to accept a medical treatment and to "show your papers" proving they have received the treatment in order to participate in society is a violation of the well-established international norms.

The Nuremberg Code came out of the Nuremberg tribunals that convicted leading German Nazis. The Code states that any experimental medical treatment must not only be voluntary but must include "informed consent," meaning the person not only volunteered but was informed of exactly what the treatment entailed and the risks involved.

Global power elites have already used COVID as cover to clamp down on free speech, assembly, religious gatherings and small business operations, creating a world of the haves and have-nots. Big-box stores like Walmart and online retailer Amazon have thrived, raking in record profits, while small businesses are dying.

So the class-action lawsuit appears justified, at least in theory. A small cabal of globalist corporations and "experts" at the WHO created the problem, made it impossible for people to live their lives as normal human beings, leading to mass anxiety and huge spikes in suicide.

Now that everyone is miserable and desperate to get back to normal, the technocrats introduce an experimental gene therapy, the mRNA vaccine, and are holding that out as the salvation, making it oh so tempting for many to line up and roll up their sleeve.

Tempting, that is, if you haven't done your research to find out who is promoting the vaccine, what are their long-held motives and goals, and what their previous track record has been.

Such research would lead you straight to the Bill and Melinda Gates Foundation, which has invested billions into an ever-growing lineup of vaccines through the GAVI global vaccine alliance and other organizations. Gates has bragged about the tremendous 20-to-1 "return on investment" he has reaped by investing in vaccine therapies. His net worth has increased by $17 billion since making the shift in focus from computers to vaccines.

U.S. companies bribing employees to take the shot

A number of U.S. companies are now bribing their employees, offering cash bonuses of $100 to $150 if they get the shot. Meijer, Kroger, Publix, Dollar General, Aldi, JBS Meat Processing and Trader Joe's, among others, have all jumped on the bandwagon. They are being highly praised by "health experts" for doing this, so look for more companies to follow suit.

Those who refuse the vaccine, which is their right under the Nuremberg Codes, will become the new untouchables in a caste system that divides people along medical lines. Those getting the shot will be allowed to re-enter something closer to normalcy while those rejecting it will be left behind.

The dots are all there – with the virus, the fear-mongering, the lockdowns and mask mandates, and the coming vaccine mandates. All you have to do is connect them.

Paul Ryan Plots Fundraiser for Liz Cheney: 'Royalty in the Swamp'

Breitbart.com

Former House Speaker Paul Ryan will hold a fundraiser for embattled House GOP Conference chairwoman Rep. Liz Cheney (R-WY) at the end of March, an invitation obtained by Breitbart News shows.

The fundraiser, a "virtual event," is slated for Thursday, March 25 at 11:00 a.m. Eastern. The invitation asks donors to give "suggested contributions" of $2,900 to "attend" or $5,800 to be a "co-host" of the Ryan-Cheney event.

Another interesting detail from the fundraising invitation is that the "Liz Cheney for Wyoming" campaign address to which donors are asked to make checks payable to is in Alexandria, Virginia, a suburb of Washington, DC. The fact that Cheney's campaign is headquartered in the nation's capital rather than in the state she purports to represent is something her primary challengers will almost surely use against her.

The news is significant because Cheney is facing multiple primary challenges after she voted to impeach now former President Donald Trump. Trump called her and her fellow Republican impeachment conspirators out in his speech this past weekend at the Conservative Political Action Conference (CPAC), naming all 17 House and Senate Republicans who voted to impeach or convict him and saying they need to be removed from office.

Ryan, the former Speaker under whose watch Republicans lost a historic majority back in the 2018 midterm elections, announced earlier that year before the midterms he was not running for reelection and would be retiring. Ryan's speakership was marred by a lack of successes and failures to do any big picture accomplishments except for things like the Trump tax cuts that the then-president carried through. He left office with a historically abysmal approval rating, down at just 12 percent according to one poll, demonstrating his ineffectiveness and failure in the job.

A Trump ally, when asked about the decision by Ryan to try to ride in to Cheney's rescue by hosting this fundraiser, told Breitbart News that it is unsurprising two failed establishment politicians would hitch their wagons together.

"Asking a Beltway insider like Paul Ryan to headline a fundraiser for your campaign is something only a candidate with a 13% approval rating like Liz Cheney would do," the Trump ally told Breitbart News.

A different GOP source, a consultant who works on campaigns including a number of House GOP candidates, added that this Cheney rescue plot by Ryan and his cohorts in the lobbying world of Washington is unsurprising. This official added that any donors who appear at this fundraiser should be "ashamed of themselves" and are working against the interests of the Republican Party's push to retake the House majority in 2022.

"It shouldn't come as a surprise that the face of the pro-amnesty, pro-war swamp is trying to rescue Cheney," the GOP official told Breitbart News. "While Liz Cheney may be royalty in the swamp, she has done more to divide the Republican Party and hinder our chances of taking back the majority than any political figure in the country. Any so-called 'Republican' donor who gives money to support her divisive efforts should be ashamed of themselves and are directly working against efforts to build a winning and unified coalition to retake the House in 2022."

While Ryan rode out of office in early 2019 with no achievements to his name and abysmal approval ratings after overseeing one of the biggest losses for the GOP in the 2018 midterms, his successor now House Minority Leader Kevin McCarthy has taken a wildly different approach to the leadership position. McCarthy, along with Trump, helped the GOP win back a net 15 seats in the 2020 congressional elections—defying all the odds and so-called experts. As such, McCarthy enjoys record-high approval ratings among the GOP base—and is the highest rated GOP congressional leader in a generation in polling.

As such, it's not all bad news for the GOP and its base. With party leaders such as McCarthy and most of the rest of his team in the House leadership—from Whip Steve Scalise to National Republican Congressional Committee (NRCC) chairman Tom Emmer to Republican Study Committee chairman Jim Banks—embracing Trump's positive populist policy vision, the GOP expects a bright future in the 2022 midterm elections. As Breitbart News has reported, McCarthy and these other leaders are already making moves to get the Republican Party reorganized after the 2020 elections and focused. McCarthy has made it a point to work with Trump—even traveling to Mar-a-Lago to meet the former president to discuss 2022 and 2024 races.

Ryan, meanwhile, has been—like Cheney and the nine other sitting House Republicans who voted to impeach Trump—antagonistic his whole career towards Trump. Back in 2017, Breitbart News published audio of a call during the 2016 presidential campaign in which Ryan lambasted Trump. "I am not going to defend Donald Trump—not now, not in the future," Ryan said in that call.

He has followed through on that promise to consistently and repeatedly attack and undermine Trump. Ryan, upon leaving Congress, joined the board of Fox News—a move for which Trump criticized Ryan and Fox News. Fox News took serious shots at Trump during the 2020 campaign including at the first presidential debate which Chris Wallace moderated.

In addition to Ryan's consistent undermining of Trump, Cheney has likewise been a thorn in Trump's side for some time. After her impeachment vote, the House GOP Conference convened to discuss removing her as conference chair over not just her anti-Trump move but the fact she did not inform the conference of her decision ahead of time—thereby hurting House GOP Conference members. While she survived that push to oust her, Cheney's repeated use of her position to engage in a personal crusade has isolated her from Republican rank-and-file members. For instance, when GOP leaders gave her another chance to be a leader instead of using her position to crusade against Trump, Cheney at a House GOP leadership press conference instead decided to use her position to force her personal anti-Trump agenda forward and attack Trump ahead of his CPAC speech. McCarthy, in contrast, defended Trump speaking at CPAC.

Cheney, the daughter of former Vice President Dick Cheney, is now facing challenges from state Sen. Anthony Bouchard and a newly announced candidate state Rep. Chuck Gray. Polling in the race shows Cheney in serious trouble, and likely headed for an eventual loss. Republicans across the party have repeatedly attacked her by name, and ripped her aggressively in interviews and speeches at CPAC. Her standing in the party is diminishing quickly, much like Ryan's did after a year plus as Speaker during Trump's presidency.

Trump Builds Army For MAGA Takeover

Sons of 1776

Former President Donald Trump continues to brilliantly disrupt the Republican establishment as he plans a meeting with Senate Leadership at his south Florida resort.

Sen. Rick Scott, chair of the National Republican Senatorial Committee, revealed on Thursday that he plans to meet with Trump at Mar-a-Lago in an effort to take back a majority in 2022.

"I've talked to Trump. I've told him what we're doing. He wants to be an additive; he wants to take back Senate's majority in 2022," Sen. Scott told a reporter.

Sen. Scott's comments come as Trump finds himself in the middle of a Republican rift so deep, many say there's no coming back. Currently the party is being split up between establishment RINOs and pro-MAGA lawmakers.

Earlier this week, Trump vowed to travel from his home in sunny Florida to the far- West state of Alaska to campaign against Sen. Lisa Murkowski, a noted RINO.

Trump has also found himself at odds with different Republican groups over using his likeness in their fundraising efforts.

His legal team slapped cease-and-desist letters demanding they stop using Trump's name to garner higher donations. Instead, Trump urged Republican voters to support his own Save America PAC.

Trump has met with a small handful of allies in both chambers of Congress, but this meeting marks his first with Senate leadership.

Scott, a former Florida governor, endorsed Trump early on. The now-Senator gave Trump his endorsement way back in 2015.

Sen. Scott has remained loyal to Trump throughout the entire first term. In fact, he was one of only eight brave Senators to challenge Joe Biden's Electoral College victory.

to leverage the power of every mechanism of government and its friends in the media to build a permanent one-party, Democrat ruled state. Democrats have taken their first steps toward one-party rule. Democrats have laid out the finishing touches on the remainder of their plan. Below outlines how its starts and moves forward.

Big tech, big censorship

Days after the invasion of the Capitol, Big Tech, a group that poured hundreds of millions of dollars into helping Democrats win the 2020 election and reliant on section 230 of the Communications Decency Act for immunity from civil suit, launched a surprise attack on web content they deemed objectionable. Twitter permanently banned President Trump's account, wiping out his contact with 88 million followers and banned thousands of conservative social media accounts. Google and Apple blocked Parler's App from their stores, and Amazon Web Services denied Parler access to its cloud network. Parler was shut down. A swath of conservatives lost the ability to speak on the Internet, the nation's new public square.

Big business, big labor conspires to change voter perception of information

In the Time Magazine article The Secret History of the Shadow Campaign That Saved the 2020 Election, the author proudly describes the inner workings of a little-noticed cabal between the U.S. Chamber of Commerce (representing big business) and the AFL-CIO (big labor) to "protect the election" from what they viewed as "disinformation." The conspiracy touched every aspect of the election, from voting systems to lawsuits to ensure massive vote by mail, to pressuring social media companies to remove what they believe to be "disinformation." The cabal's goal was to secretly "…influence voter perceptions, change voting rules and laws, steer media coverage, and control the flow of information" [received by voters]. The cabal claims the conspiracy was "… not rigging the election; they were fortifying it."

Based on the actions of big tech and election results, the cabal achieved its purpose - it changed the voting system by changing laws and regulations governing the election, generating negative media coverage of Republicans, and controlling the flow of information voters were able to receive. To this day, social media prohibits many types of political information from conservatives that it views as objectionable. In a recent opinion piece by James Freeman of the Wall Street Journal, he notes "…that the most consequential use of this censorship tool in 2020 was an abusive blocking of true information." You need to read his article to find out the censored information; otherwise, this article would likely be banned by social media as objectionable if written herein.

Democrats seek to punish Republican members of Congress

The Democrat Speaker of the House claims her members are at risk of harm, and "the enemy is within the halls of Congress." Democrats in Congress seek to punish members of the Republican party who exercised their right to object to electors under 3 U.S.C. sec.15, including expulsion. Democrats advocate for creating an enemies list containing the names of Trump supporters and deny them jobs in the private sector. A counsel for PBS even called for sending the children of Trump's supporters to re-education camps. Katie Couric told Bill Maher that members of President Trump's "cult" need to be "deprogrammed."

Biden's asserts role as law-maker as well as Executive

In the first weeks of his presidency, Biden issued more Executive Orders ("EOs") than all other presidents combined at the beginning of a presidency, 52 EOs, and memoranda. While the "legal scope" of EOs is limited to federal operations, Biden's Memorandum on "Modernizing Regulatory Review" requires the new substantive policies contained in the EOs be included in all new regulations to achieve racial justice, social welfare, environmental stewardship, human dignity, equity, and the interests of future generations. All goals beyond the scope of the laws passed by Congress. This policy directive could have a massive social impact since agencies issue around 4,000 regulations a year, about 80,000 pages worth of new law.

During the campaign Biden addressed rule by EO, stating "you can't legislate by executive action unless you're a dictator." The fact-checkers complain his comment were taken out of context. Assuming it is taken out of context, it is not credible to believe that 52 EOs, reversing federal policy in multiple areas of law, can be implemented without additional congressional authority? With due respect to the fact–checkers, George Orwell, in his essay on "Politics and the English Language," observed that "political language is designed to make lies sound truthful …, and to give an appearance of solidity to pure wind."

Policy changes by E.O.s go far beyond the laws being implemented

•Immediate cancellation of the Keystone XL pipeline and suspending the issuance of new federal oil and gas leases will put tens of thousands of workers, with well-paying jobs, out of work. It will ensure the U.S. is no longer energy independent and dramatically increase the price of energy. It will also disrupt Canada's oil production, make more oil available to China and ensure a market in the E.U. for Russian oil.

•Biden re-joined the Paris Climate Agreement and ordered the reversal of most of Trump's environmental orders and regulations. These EOs will increase the cost of fuel for cars, energy for homes, manufacturing, and most retail products. With China being exempt from compliance with the Paris Agreement, China becomes more competitive by having a less costly regulatory compliance. China will continue to grow as the world's largest economy.

•Simultaneously stopping the construction of the southern border wall while allowing undocumented and untested, covid-19 immigration from Central America ensures chaos in our immigration system and the pandemic's spread. Prosecution of adults entering the U.S. illegally is suspended. Deportation relief is made available for millions of more residents under Temporary Protective Status. Democrats anticipate most of the 12 million new immigrants will be loyal Democrats.

•Concurrently with an open southern border, Biden reimposes a travel ban on E.U. countries, our most loyal allies.

•The EOs relating to nondiscrimination of the transgender population ends girls' sports. So much for Title IX protections.

•Biden ordered all to wear face masks on federal property but arbitrarily exempting himself. It's Governor Newsom's law of hypocrisy - rules only apply to little people.

•Biden provides billions to public schools to defray the cost of re-opening but does not require teachers to return to teaching.

•Workers can continue receiving unemployment compensation for as long as they "fear" returning to work.

Texas is defending the rights of its citizens. It has sued over climate change and immigration EOs.

D.C. becomes a military state

26,000 national guard troops are brought to D.C. to protect the Capitol during the inauguration, about five times more than in Afghanistan and Iraq combined. Congressman Van Drew commented, "It looked like [Biden was] getting sworn in in Venezuela…" The military will leave 5,000 – 7,000 troops in D.C. and massive fencing around the Capitol, for several more months, at least. Moreover, the Department of Homeland Security ("D.H.S.") issued a terrorism advisory that there is a "heightened threat environment across the United States that is likely to persist over the coming weeks." D.H.S. admitted it has no information of any creditable plot.

Will DC be a perpetually occupied military zone to protect a government that fears its citizens? Is this the beginning of military control of the nation? Is this the new image of America to the world?

Investigative reporter, Glen Greenwald, cautions that fighting "domestic terrorists" presents dangers "…when governments, exploiting media-generated fear and dangers, arm themselves with the power to control information, debate, opinion, activism, and protests."

Packing the Supreme Court

Additionally, the president announced a commission to study reforming the U.S. Supreme Court, including the need for additional justices. The commission will be run out of the office of the White House counsel. Is this the first step to packing the court to dilute the active conservatives' 5 – 4 majority? Is this the end of even the appearance of a neutral Supreme Court? Can a political Supreme Court ensure the rule of law?

D.C. Statehood

The DC mayor is demanding statehood as promised by the Democrats. Our Constitution allows Congress to admit new states into the Union. The Democrat-controlled Congress supports it and has the votes to pass it. If Republicans launch a filibuster, Democrats can repeal it merely by changing the Senate rules as done by Senate Majority Leaders Reid and McConnell for judicial and cabinet-level appointments. Such a move would give Democrats two additional Senate seats and likely control of the Senate for decades. It would also position Democrats to admit additional states such as Puerto Rico.

Eliminate the Electoral College

Then there is the non-threatening sounding proposal "The National Popular Vote Interstate Compact" ("N.P.V."). Under N.P.V., by agreement with other states in the compact, a state awards all its electoral votes to the presidential candidate who wins the popular national vote, notwithstanding who wins the popular vote in the respective states. The compact goes into effect when the states controlling the majority of electoral votes (270) join the compact. Fifteen states, representing 196 electoral votes, have already adopted the compact. The measure is still active in states having 97 electoral votes and controlled by Democrats.

Democrats have two years to install a one-party rule, or else?

Democrats have two years with control of the House, Senate, and presidency to transform the U.S. into a nation of one-party, Democratic rule, which is common in many authoritarian countries. If Democrats succeed, they will control the U.S. for decades.

If the Democrats fail to solidify one-party rule after denying freedom of speech to many conservatives, attempting to punish duly elected members of Congress for exercising their rights under the law, establishing rule by executive fiat, packing the Supreme Court to diminish a constitutionally appointed conservative majority, add additional states to ensure Democrats control the Senate in perpetuity, change the electoral college without a constitutional amendment and open the southern border to anyone who might be a Democrat supporter, they will be so soundly rebuked by the voters. The Democrat party will be the ninth political party to sink into oblivion.

The outcome of the political fight over the next two years will be between those who favor the rule of law and protecting the rights even of those deemed "objectionable" or "intolerable" by the Democrats and those willing to make whatever rule changes necessary, to transform the nation into one-party rule. Both outcomes are possible under our Constitution, a broad and vague document that can sanction freedom and free enterprise or socialism guarded by strict penal and tax codes.

Durham to continue to withhold an interim report regarding the status of his special council probe into Obama-Biden administration-authorized FBI and DOJ spying on the incoming and ongoing Trump administration.

Repeated indications that Durham's probe would wrap up to offer long-awaited conclusions before the election were reportedly disrupted by the intervention of new discoveries and COVID-19 related investigatory delays.

Then, just weeks before the election, former Attorney General William Barr had alerted Congress by letter on Dec. 1 that he planned to grant special council status to the investigation in order to provide Durham and his team "with the assurance that they could complete their work, without regard to the outcome of the election."

Under the same regulation used in May 2017 to name Robert Mueller as special counsel to investigate alleged and ultimately disproved Trump administration "Russia collusion," the appointment was intended to make it more politically problematic for a prospective Biden-Harris administration to sack Durham, or to require their new attorney general to quash his probe.

Under DOJ regulations, special counsels aren't subject to "day-to-day supervision," and can only be removed for "misconduct, dereliction of duty, conflict of interest, or for other good causes, including violation of department policies."

Barr's order stated that Durham's special council mandate includes investigating whether "any federal official, employee, or any other person or entity" violated laws in the "intelligence, counter-intelligence, or law enforcement activities" directed at the 2016 campaigns or individuals associated with the Trump administration.

Regardless of AG Barr's good intentions, the bad news is that we can fully expect a President Biden and his administration appointees to bury outcomes that reflect poorly or criminally upon their own actions.

Biden's AG pick, Merrick Garland, will be under pressure to protect reputations by shutting down Durham before he can issue indictments or an embarrassing report.

This is, after all, the same former Vice President Joe Biden who reportedly suggested charging incoming National Security Advisor Gen. Michael Flynn with charges of foreign collusion under an obscure 1799 "Logan Act" during an early 2017 Oval office meeting with President Obama and FBI Director James Comey.

Although FBI officials who interviewed Gen. Flynn regarding his activities believed he was truthful and innocent of wrongdoing, and despite the government's decision to drop charges against him, this American patriot was nevertheless bankrupted and defamed through resulting legal processes.

So far as "justice and accountability" is concerned, the only person ever brought under criminal charges by Durham's team so far was former FBI attorney Kevin Clinesmith who pleaded guilty to altering a key document in Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act (FISA) filings related to one-time Trump campaign adviser Carter Page.

Unlike Gen. Flynn, FISA judge James Boasberg gave Clinesmith a mere slap on the wrist sentence: 12 months of probation and 400 hours of community service.

Meanwhile, we now know that since late 2019, the FBI has been in possession of information obtained on a laptop that Joe's son Hunter had delivered to a computer repair shop about lucrative Ukraine, China and Russia Biden family payback schemes that allegedly traded on Joe's government influence which far eclipse any corruption that President Trump was falsely impeached (and acquitted) for.

Nineteen House Republicans are now calling on the FBI to reveal whether it was in possession of the retrieved laptop information during President Trump's impeachment.

The impeachment ordeal over offenses stemmed from a 2019 Trump telephone conversation with Ukraine President Volodymyr Zelensky inquiring into Joe's publicly admitted role in firing the prosecutor who was investigating corruption charges against Burisma Holdings, a major energy company that was paying Hunter as a no-show board member.

A year-long GOP-led Senate Homeland and Government Affairs and Senate Finance Committee investigation flagged foreign extortion risks regarding Hunter Biden's $50,000 per month board seat with Burisma at a time when V.P. Joe was serving as President Obama's top Ukraine and China representative.

In addition to the over $4 million paid by Burisma to Hunter Biden and his business partner, Devon Archer, for membership on the board, Hunter, his family, and Archer also received millions of dollars from other foreign nationals with questionable backgrounds.

Included, as asserted by the Senate Homeland and Government Affairs and Senate Finance Committee report, are a $3.5 million wire transfer from the widow of a former Moscow mayor and business associations with Gongwen Dong and other Chinese nationals linked to the Communist government and the People's Liberation Army which resulted in millions of dollars in questionable transactions. A joint bank account with Dong financed a $100,000 global spending spree with Joe's brother and sister James and Sara Biden.

The Senate committee additionally reported that Hunter Biden paid nonresident women who appeared to be linked to an "Eastern European prostitution or human trafficking ring." And while stating that it was unknown whether the FBI ever followed up on these assertions, there was no evidence that either Hunter or his attorney have denied the charges.

An Oct. 15 New York Post article presented detailed emails between Hunter Biden and his associates regarding a venture involving a since-defunct Shanghai-based China Energy Company (CEFC) which proposed equity breakdowns between Hunter, his associates, and a share to be held by Hunter Biden for "the big guy" (clearly identified since as Joe Biden).

Hunter Biden has reported that he has been formally notified that he is currently under investigation for tax evasion by the U.S. Attorney's

Masks are doing much more harm, than good.

Take a look at this Firefighter's video where he tests oxygen levels behind COVID masks. Then read OSHA's Occupational Safety and Health Standards 1910.134 regarding Respiratory Protection.

https://www.bitchute.com/video/r0FopkwMIZpL/

According to https://www.osha.gov/laws-regs/regulations/standardnumber/1910/1910.134 "Oxygen deficient atmosphere means an atmosphere with an oxygen content below 19.5% by volume."

According to a Clarification of OSHA's requirements "Human beings must breathe oxygen . . . to survive, and begin to suffer adverse health effects when the oxygen level of their breathing air drops below [19.5 percent oxygen]. Below 19.5 percent oxygen . . . , air is considered oxygen-deficient. At concentrations of 16 to 19.5 percent, workers engaged in any form of exertion can rapidly become symptomatic as their tissues fail to obtain the oxygen necessary to function properly (Rom, W., Environmental and Occupational Medicine, 2nd ed.; Little, Brown; Boston, 1992). Increased breathing rates, accelerated heartbeat, and impaired thinking or coordination occur more quickly in an oxygen-deficient environment. Even a momentary loss of coordination may be devastating to a worker if it occurs while the worker is performing a potentially dangerous activity, such as climbing a ladder. Concentrations of 12 to 16 percent oxygen cause tachypnea (increased breathing rates), tachycardia (accelerated heartbeat), and impaired attention, thinking, and coordination (e.g., Ex. 25-4), even in people who are resting."

Haven't you had enough of the Democrats lies? Candace Owens states it perfectly: "To all the leftists crying because Texas and Mississippi have announced they will resume FREEDOM - did you know that you are still welcome to stay in your home all day and double mask? You don't need a government mandate to be a paranoid recluse."

Wounded Knee

"There is a generation that is pure in its own eyes, Yet is not washed from its filthiness." Proverbs 30:12

By Riley J. Hood—Milwaukee County Constitution Party

On July 4th, 2020 President Trump held an Independence Day celebration at Mt. Rushmore in South Dakota. Julian Bear Runner of the Oglala Sioux Tribal Council said, "The lands on which that mountain is carved and the lands he's about to visit belong to the Great Sioux nation under a treaty signed in 1851 and the For Laramie Treaty of 1868 and I have to tell him he doesn't have permission from its original sovereign owners to enter the territory at this time."

This begs the question, were the Sioux it's "original sovereign owners? I hardly think so. According to www.warpaths2peacepipes.com, "The Sioux tribe originally lived as Woodland Indians along the upper Mississippi in Minnesota, Iowa, and Wisconsin. The were forced west by the French and their Chippewa allies." Their horses and rifles were not original to their tribe, they were introduced by white people. Our nation's history is one of violence by Indigenous peoples against us. They often sided with our enemy, the French when we were colonists, the British during the Revolution. They revolted in 1862 during our Civil War. These were acts of violence that broke Treaties in place. After Little Big Horn, later in 1876, American troops trapped 3,000 Sioux at the Tongue River valley; the tribes formally surrendered in October, after which the majority of members returned to their reservations. By 1876, America lost patience with Indians and after a decade of total war which included logistical warfare, to wit, destroying the buffalo, the Sioux were thoroughly defeated.

According to britainicca.com, "Such was the state of the Lakota when the Ghost Dance religious movement swept across the Plains in 1890. The Ghost Dance was not a new movement: the first iteration took hold around 1870 among the Northern Paiute in Nevada, but it faded out after a few years." It was revived in 1889 by a Paiute named Wovoka, whose father had been a devotee of the first Ghost Dance. Wovoka also learned about the Bible from white ranchers.

During a total solar eclipse on January 1, 1889, according to Britannica, "Wovoka fell unconscious and experienced a dream. God told him that the Indians needed to remain peaceful and regularly perform a ritual circle dance. If they followed these instructions, then in 1891 God would return the earth to its natural state prior to the arrival of European colonists. He would bury the white settlers under 30 feet of soil and would raise Indian ancestors from the dead." This was what the Lakota wanted to hear. They modified the Ghost Dance, "incorporating white ghost shirts painted with various symbols that they believed would protect them from bullets."

In October 1890 Daniel F. Royer arrived at the Pine Ridge Agency to assume command. Many of the Lakota on the reservation were Ghost Dancers, and he thought it was a prelude to an attack. Royer asked the Bureau of Indian Affairs (BIA) to relocate the Ghost Dancers. In November the Army deployed to Lakota reservations to suppress the Ghost Dance. Sitting Bull, Chief of the Hunkpapa Lakota tolerated the Ghost Dancers, and was to be relocated. On December 15th, 43 tribal policemen went to Sitting Bull's cabin, where a fight with the Ghost Dancers ensued. 9 Hunkpapa including Sitting Bull were dead.

Lakota opposed to reservation life armed themselves and gathered in "the stronghold" in the South Dakota Badlands. The Oglala Chief Red Cloud and Miniconjou Chief Big Foot tried to negotiate a peace preservation of Sioux traditions. Neither men were Ghost Dancers, and of course Ghost Dancing wasn't a Sioux tradition. The 7th Calvary was to arrest Big Foot and his followers and send them to Fort Omaha.

"The Massacre," according to Britannica.com, "On December 28, 1890, the 7th Cavalry, commanded by Col. James W. Forsyth, reached the Miniconjou camp near Wounded Knee Creek," and "Big Foot saw Forsyth's scouts and informed them that he would surrender without resistance. On December 29 Forsyth convened with the Miniconjou to begin the process of weapons confiscation. He herded them into a nearby clearing, had their men form a council circle, and surrounded the circle with his cavalry. He also positioned four Hotchkiss guns on a hilltop bordering the clearing."

Things went sour when after a few guns were turned in, a cache of hidden weapons were found after a search was executed. The search then became on ongoing affair. In response, "A man named Sits Straight began to dance the Ghost Dance and attempted to rouse the other members of the band, claiming that bullets would not touch them if they donned their sacred ghost shirts." That put the soldiers in attack mode. Britannica states, "When a deaf Miniconjou named Black Coyote refused to give up his gun, the weapon accidentally went off," and the 7th Cavalry opened fire. "Scores of Miniconjou were shot and killed in the first few moments, among them Big Foot. Some women and children attempted to flee the scene and sought protection in a nearby ravine, but the Hotchkiss guns fired on their position." Other Miniconjou were shot by mounted soldiers, "The 7th Cavalry did not discriminate." "Immediately following the massacre, Forsyth ordered the transportation of 51 wounded Miniconjou to the Pine Ridge Agency. Hundreds of Lakota who lived there fled the area in horror; some even ambushed the 7th Cavalry in retaliation," prompting the dispatch of more troops to the area "to quell further resistance." Modern scholars estimate that between 250 and 300 Miniconjou were killed in total, including women and children. At least 25 soldiers also died, "many likely fallen to friendly fire." After Wounded Knee, the Ghost Dance sputtered out, and Wovoka died a beggar.

The Bureau of Indian affairs claimed this was battle. Some think it was the 7th Calvary's revenge for the Little Big Horn. Col. Forsyth was removed from command, and faced an investigation, in which was he cleared. 20 Calvary men were awarded the Congressional Medal of Honor, which was a reflection of times.

The Indians were moved to reservations, were according to the Sioux, "Six years after their sacred lands were taken from them, Lakotas were prohibited by the Code of Indian Offenses from practicing their ceremonies, dances, or celebrations. The federal government banned these practices to force Native Americans to abandon their "heathenish rites and customs."

In 1973 Wounded Knee was where the American Indian Movement sent 200 armed men to declare an "Independent Oglala Sioux Nation" and refused to leave until the federal government ousted the presiding Sioux chairman, and promised to honor all Indian treaties, and correct the treatment of American Indians throughout the country. Federal troops besieged the area for 71 days, reaching a settlement after two deaths and several exchanges of gunfire.

Regarding the 7th Calvary, one can could assert their actions were unprofessional, but remember the Sioux prided themselves on teaching their women and children to kill white men. This is retroactively using our standards against, as all socialists do. What the 7th Calvary didn't do is launch a purposeful attack, which is military's job. They are certainly not guilty of premeditated murder, although everyone including myself would have hoped for a better outcome. Most people don't rejoice at the death of over 250 people.

Wovoka actually lived with white ranchers. How did he reward them? By preaching a false prophecy of hatred. Burying all white people under 30 feet of soil. These men may have been "unarmed" but they were hardly peaceful. As to being immune to bullets by powerful medicine men, Geronimo and others would say the same things before going on a murder spree. The Milwaukee County Constitution Parry asserts that in most conflicts, there is plenty of guilt to go around, but according to socialists only white Christian men are ever of guilty of anything. It is long past due, that agitators are confronted with facts of their own actions, and be brought to the realization that they are sinners like the rest of us.

Exposing The Green New Deal

By Robert DesJarlais

The Green New Deal was released in the U.S. House of Representatives February 7, 2019 by Rep. Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez (D-NY) and Sen. Ed Markey (D-MA). This fourteen-page resolution "recognizes the duty of the Federal Government to create a Green New Deal" and pushes for transitioning the United Stated to use 100% green renewable energy by 2030. It cites human activity as a cause for climate change resulting in global warming, "wildfires, severe storms, droughts that threaten human life, healthy communities and critical infrastructure." The Green New Deal would "counteract systemic injustices" such as hourly wage stagnation, erosion of earnings and bargaining power, large racial wealth divide, and the gender earnings gap, primarily in "frontline and vulnerable communities." It also pushes for "stopping current, preventing future, and repairing historic oppression of indigenous communities, communities of color, migrant communities, depopulated rural communities, the poor, low-income workers, women, the elderly, the unhoused, people with disabilities, and youth," again referred to as "frontline and vulnerable communities."

The document refers to the "social cost of carbon" that had been part of the Obama administration's plans for addressing climate change.

Masked as addressing climate change, this Green New Deal takes a page out of history, and builds itself on the concept of FDR's New Deal calling for a massive mobilization of our communities, government and the people on the scale of the World War II era.

Under the surface are the currents of a tyrannical reach into every aspect of American life. It calls for providing "all the people of the United States with high quality health care, affordable, safe, and adequate housing, economic security, and access to clean water, clean air, healthy and affordable food, and nature." According to reports, the Green New Deal will redirect money to the "real job creators who make our communities more healthy, sustainable and secure." This includes programs that will "create 20 million jobs, both directly and indirectly, by implementing a nationally-funded, locally-controlled, direct employment initiative replacing unemployment offices with local employment offices."

Similar to FDR's New Deal, the Green New Deal would "include WPA-style public jobs program to secure the right to decent paid work through public jobs for unemployed and those presently working in low paid service-sector jobs." Jobs would be focused on Sustainable energy, energy efficiency retrofitting of buildings for insulation and efficiency, mass transit and "complete streets" that promote safe bike and pedestrian traffic, regional food systems based on sustainable organic agriculture, clean manufacturing, and public services such as education, youth programs, child care, and senior care.

The cost of a program for the federal government "as an employer of last resort would be relatively small, around 1-2% of GDP because it corresponds with huge savings in unemployment insurance as it pays people to work rather than paying them to not work." Bernie Sander's 2016 presidential campaign called for the creation of 13 million living-wage jobs that would be included in the Green New Deal. Jill Stein, Green Party 2016 presidential candidate support of the Green New Deal called for a higher estate tax on the wealthiest Americans, raising the top incomes tax rates while lowering it for low- and middle-income Americans, which would raise an extra $130 billion per year.

One of the earlier proposals from Rep. Ocasio-Cortez made reference to a "system of regional and specialized public banks" that would be necessary to finance parts of the Green New Deal agenda. This may include the Federal Home Loan Bank system consisting of eleven cooperatively-owned regional banks. Collectively, they represent the oldest and largest government-sponsored enterprises in the country with a trillion dollars in assets.

Since 1992, the 40 chapters of Agenda 21 gave the big picture of world government thru environment and economic measures. This was detailed more closely in the Agenda 2030

"road map" for 10-year measurements of implementation. The Green New Deal provides a more specific indications of just how aggressive and intrusive these plans are. Both Democrats and Republicans have supported the Green New Deal.

All freedom minded people must read the Green New Deal (easily googled and only 14 pages) and contact your local, state and federal elected officials. Ask them what their position is on the Green New Deal. If they support it, ask specifically what they support and why? We need to stop further erosion of our liberties by using expanded Comprehensive Land Use Plans, Zoning Changes, and Environmentally Engineered Laws taken from Agenda 21, Agenda 2030 and the Green New Deal.

The Constitution Party of Wisconsin will stand against expanded federal tyranny in order to keep government at the local level and in the hands of the people.

Daniel Webster is quoted as saying "it is hardly too strong to say that the Constitution was made to guard the people against the dangers of good intentions. There are men in all ages who mean to govern well, but they mean to govern. They promise to be good masters, but they mean to be masters." Thomas Jefferson said "All tyranny needs to gain a foothold is for people of good conscience to remain silent."

The Muslim Report: Egypt

"Let all the earth fear the Lord: let all inhabitants of the world stand in awe of him." Psalm 33:8

By Riley J. Hood—Milwaukee County Constitution Party

In 1981, the Muslim Brotherhood assassinated Anwar Sadat while he was reviewing his troops. His murderer proclaimed, "I have killed Pharaoh." Before Hosni Mubarak was murdered, he was labelled as "a renegade infidel." Both these men were Muslims, but these are merely two examples of the embedded violence that Islam sanctions as holiness. It is called Jihad.

ISIS is still active in Egypt, in spite of Al-Baghdadi "dying like a dog," and a counterinsurgency campaign by the Egyptian Army. Why? Because Islam still exists.

Under the 2016 Law for Building and Restoring Churches, the government has approved 1.171 of the 3,730 requests to build a Church edifice. While Prime Minister Mustafa Madbouli has asked for the process to sped up, there is resistance to the law from Imams and the Muslim majority. Some ministries have called licensed churches freedom of worship, the appropriate term would mean worship with State permission, and hopefully without persecution.

In April 2018 a mob of 300 Muslims forced a Church in al-Kumeria to close its doors, even though it was licensed. The police closed the only Church building in the village of Koum al-Raheb on December 9th, 2018 the very day it opened, in spite of 2016 law, the grant to this Church was rejected on a dating technicality, after they built it. There are 2,500 Christians in Koum. It is this author's suspicion that Muslims would experience no technical difficulties if they wanted to turn the building into a Mosque.

Egypt has set a nightly curfew in place under the pretext of COVID-19. Police uncovered a bomb plot to blow up a Church building on Easter 2020. Many Christians lost their jobs as a result of the Covid-19 panic and lockdown. When western Christians offered relief, an 11yr-old Christian boy was given his own Bible, saying, "I prayed to Jesus to have my own Bible. This is the best gift I have ever received." We take Bible-ownership for granted in America.

The Milwaukee County Constitution Party asserts that the systemic treatment of Christians by the Egyptian government has measurably improved. Still, these improvements are an accommodation to a defeated minority at best. It is time for Christians to provide for their own defense, even if fake socialist congregations in the west reject their doing so. Self-defense isn't victory, but it is a good first step.

The Muslim Report: Chechnya

"By so much was Jesus made a surety of a better testament." Hebrews 7:22

By Riley J. Hood—Milwaukee County Constitution Party

The break-up of the USSR sparked a civil war. In 1992, the Russians tried to remove the Muslim leader Dzhokhar Dudayev. The First Chechen War began in December 11th, 1994, when Russian forces entered Chechnya. The fighting lasted 1 year and 8 months, ending on August 31st, 1996 and was considered an Islamic victory as the Khasavyurt Accord resulted in the withdrawal of Russian Federal troops.

The Second Chechen War was started in August 1999. Muslim fighters from Chechnya infiltrated Dagestan and called for Jihad. On October 1st, Russian troops entered Chechnya. The campaign ended the de facto independence of the Chechen Republic of Ichkeria and restored Russian federal control over the territory. After a siege from December 1999 to February 2000 Grozny was taken. Russia imposed direct rule in May 2000. Chechen Muslims continued to resist, inflicting Russian casualties and murdering unarmed Christians, a typical Islamic activity. By 2009, the Chechen Jihad was degraded to the point where rebuilding began.

Chechnya is a region in Russia the is in the north Caucasus: predominantly Muslim and autonomous, even though their leader Ramzan Kadyrov is appointed by Russia. The area was conquered and Sunni Islam was imposed between the 16th and the 19th centuries.

Ramzan Kadyrov describes Chechnya this way, "a model of interethnic and interfaith peace and harmony." Ramzan has been accused of oppressing some of the people, but he keeps the oil flowing. Russians are the largest ethnic minority in Chechnya, and they only account for 2% of the population according opendemocracy.com citing a 2010 census. OD asks. "what is life like for ethnic Russians in the most mono-ethnic and mono-faith area of Russia?" OD continues, "The label "Russian", however, applies here to anyone who self-identifies as such. They might be ethnic Cossacks, Ukrainians or Armenians, but what unites them is their religious identity: they are all part of the Russian Orthodox Church." In 1979 over 30% of the population of Soviet Chechnya were ethnic Russians. By 1989 they still made up 25%. In 2002, however, less than four percent of residents were Russian. Reports of ethnic cleansing emerged under Djokhar Dudayev (1991-1996). See where this going?

Open Democracy writes, "Finding work in Chechnya is completely dependent on corrupt practices: you can only get most jobs by offering money in advance, and only with a recommendation from someone who is trusted in the relevant workplace." Not only for office jobs, "in Chechnya you need to pay to get a job as an ambulance driver. The clan system is at the heart of everything here."

OD reports there is Islamic pressure on Christian women. "I've had to deal with all kinds of attitudes towards me, I'm a single Russian woman, after all, says 'Lena,' chuckling. There were men who wanted her as a lover, but she couldn't bring herself to do that. And on the other hand, they would say: Wear a hijab, become a Muslim and we'll find you a husband. 'But that wasn't for me either: I've always been Orthodox, it's part of our Russian culture." Chechnya is full of Islamic predators, marrying our women, raising the children as janissaries, etc. In Chechnya, as in the whole of Islam, Islamic men think of our women as sluts. Government schools demand that girls wear a hijab. Many women converted to Islam, proving the never believed in anything and bolstering the Islam monster in his degrading assertions.

OD reported on the opening of a Russian Orthodox Church in a Cossack village, which Kadyrov made an appearance at. The Church was closed in less than a month. The reality is that village has been ethnically cleansed, and Chechen Muslims live there now, "Those Cossacks who weren't killed in the First War in the 1990s had fled the area, replaced by Chechens from remote settlements." Kind of like Milwaukee's Northside was ethnically cleansed of German people, by gangs and street crime, and black people live there now.

On May 19th, 2017 four Muslims armed with guns and Molotov cocktails attacked a Church in Grozny, killing two parishioners and two policemen. The only good news is that all four Jihadists were killed. This is Chechnya at peace. The Jihadis won't go away until the religion that creates them is permanently discredited in the minds of men.

Why COVID Vaccine Testing Is a Farce

Story At A Glance

Vaccine makers rarely use inert placebos (such as a saline shot), which is the gold standard for drug trials. Instead, they typically assess the safety of a new vaccine against another vaccine. This hides side effects, as most vaccines have side effects and risks

The Oxford/AstraZeneca COVID-19 vaccine is being tested against a meningitis vaccine, which shares many of the side effects reported from COVID-19 vaccines

Pfizer and Moderna have started offering placebo recipients in their trials the real mRNA gene therapy, which means it will be even more difficult to tease out which side effects are actually caused by the shot and which ones aren't, over the long term

In one clinical trial for the Moderna vaccine in Lenexa, Kansas, virtually all of the 650 volunteers who initially received the placebo have opted to get the real vaccine, which means there's essentially no comparison group left for the ongoing study, which was slated to run for two years

Some argue that placebo arms aren't needed in COVID-19 vaccine trials, but their argument hinges on the idea that the vaccine being tested is known to be safe, which it absolutely is not at this point, and won't be for many years.

Justification for Elimination of Controls Is Flimsy at Best

Ironically, both the use of an active placebo and the elimination of control groups are being justified on "moral grounds" by pro-vaccine advocates who say it's unethical to not provide volunteers with something of value, such as another vaccine in the case of active placebos, or a vaccine they know is effective in the case of giving placebo recipients the real McCoy.

Both of these arguments are beyond questionable. As mentioned, no vaccine is 100% safe, so getting an active vaccine placebo comes with risk, not merely benefit, and when it comes to the novel mRNA technology used in COVID-19 vaccines, historical data are troubling to say the least, and the U.S. Vaccine Adverse Event Reporting System (VAERS) is rapidly filling up with COVID-19 vaccine-related injury reports and deaths.

As reported in "COVID-19 Vaccine To Be Tested on 6-Year-Olds," as of February 4, 2021, VAERS had received 12,697 injury reports and 653 deaths following COVID-19 vaccination.6 Even more telling, between January 2020 and January 2021, COVID-19 vaccines accounted for 70% of the annual vaccine deaths, even though these vaccines had only been available for less than two months!

Between January 2020 and January 2021, COVID-19 vaccines accounted for 70% of the annual vaccine deaths, even though these vaccines had only been available for less than two months!

What's more, previous research7 by the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services found fewer than 1% of vaccine adverse events are ever reported to VAERS, so in reality, we may be looking at more than 1 million COVID-19 vaccine injuries within the first two months of their release.

In my view, the data are far from assuring overall, which makes the elimination of long-term control groups — flawed as they may be due to active placebo use — all the more troubling.

All Previous Coronavirus Vaccines Failed Upon Challenge

Historically, previous attempts to create a coronavirus vaccine have all failed miserably, as they ended up creating devastating immune enhancement. This is why any and all short-cuts taken in the COVID-19 vaccine development is so troubling.

In my May 2020 interview above with Robert Kennedy Jr., he summarized the history of coronavirus vaccine development, which began in 2002, following three consecutive SARS outbreaks. By 2012, Chinese, American and European scientists were working on SARS vaccine development, and had about 30 promising candidates.

Of those, the four best vaccine candidates were then given to ferrets, which are the closest analogue to human lung infections. In the video above, which is a select outtake from my full interview, Kennedy explains what happened next.

While the ferrets displayed robust antibody response, which is the metric used for vaccine licensing, once they were challenged with the wild virus, they were overtaken by a cytokine storm response, known as paradoxical immune enhancement, became severely ill and died.

The same thing happened when they tried to develop a respiratory syncytial virus (RSV) vaccine in the 1960s. RSV is an upper respiratory illness that is very similar to that caused by coronaviruses.

At that time, they had decided to skip animal trials and go directly to human trials. The RSV vaccine was tested on about 35 children, with identical results. Initially, they developed a robust antibody response, but when challenged with the wild virus, all became ill and two died. The vaccine was abandoned.

Yes, We Really Do Need Placebo Arms

Despite such dire failures, some still argue that placebo arms aren't needed in COVID-19 vaccine trials. In an opinion piece in STAT News,8 Kent Peacock, a professor of philosophy, and John Vokey, a professor of psychology, both from the University of Lethbridge, compare the use of placebo control groups with giving out dummy parachutes during wartime.

"Giving the real treatment to 100% of the volunteers removes one of the major ethical barriers to challenge trials: the high probability of harmful side effects or death to members of a control group," they say, completely ignoring the fact that volunteers in the vaccine arm may be put at grave unknown risks, not just in the short term but in the long term as well.

This entire argument hinges on the idea that the vaccine being tested is KNOWN to be safe, which it absolutely is not at this point, and won't be for many years. They even argue that "not using a placebo … would be less ethically questionable to test the vaccine on older participants."

People are dying because of the vaccines … It looks more and more as though we're dealing with homicide, and maybe even murder. ~ Reiner Fuellmich, attorney

Well, they published that article in early September 2020, and now we can more or less conclusively state that they are wrong on this point, as older vaccine recipients have been dropping like flies.

'We're Dealing With Homicide,' German Attorney Says

As reported by Brian Shilhavy, editor of Health Impact News, February 19, 2021:9

"Earlier this week we published10 the English translation of a video in German that attorney Reiner Fuellmich published with a whistleblower who works in a nursing home where several residents were injected with the experimental COVID mRNA shots against their will, and where many of them died a short time later.

Since that interview was published, other whistleblowers in Germany who work in nursing homes have also stepped forward, some with video footage showing residents being held down and vaccinated against their wish ...

Fuellmich … stated: 'We are getting more and more calls from other whistleblowers form other nursing homes in this country, plus we're getting information from other countries, Sweden for example, Norway … Gibraltar … here are also incidents in England and in the United States that match these descriptions …

It means that people are dying because of the vaccines. What we are seeing in this video clip is worse than anything we ever expected. If this is representative for what's going on in other nursing homes, and in other countries, then we have a very serious problem.

And so do the people who make the vaccines, so do the people who administer the vaccines. It looks more and more as though we're dealing with homicide, and maybe even murder.'"

Novel mRNA Gene Therapy Is Not Harmless

It's important to realize what mRNA and DNA COVID-19 vaccine actually are. They are not traditional vaccines made with live or attenuated viruses. They're actually gene therapies. They don't even meet the medical or legal definition of a vaccine, as detailed in "COVID-19 mRNA Shots Are Legally Not Vaccines." This novel, never before used therapy has a long list of potential problems, including the following:

The messenger RNA (mRNA) used in many COVID-19 vaccines are synthetic. Your body sees these synthetic particles as non-self, which can cause autoantibodies to attack your own tissues. Judy Mikovits, Ph.D., explained this in her interview, featured in "How COVID-19 Vaccines May Destroy the Lives of Millions."

Your body also views free mRNA as a warning signal to your immune system, as they drive inflammatory diseases. This is why making synthetic mRNA thermostable, meaning it doesn't break down as easily as it normally would by encasing the mRNA in lipid nanoparticles is likely to be problematic.

COVID-19 vaccines use PEGylated lipid nanoparticles, and PEG is known to cause anaphylaxis.11

Previous attempts to develop an mRNA-based drug using lipid nanoparticles failed because when the dose was too low, the drug had no effect, and when dosed too high, the drug became too toxic.12

The synthetic RNA influences, in part, the gene syncytin. According to Mikovits, when syncytin is aberrantly expressed in the brain, you can develop multiple sclerosis. Expression of the syncytin gene also inflames and dysregulates communication between the brain microglia, which are critical for clearing toxins and pathogens in the brain. It also dysregulates your immune system and your endocannabinoid system, which is the dimmer switch on inflammation.

The synthetic mRNA also has an HIV envelope expressed in it, which can cause immune dysregulation.

Symptoms of COVID-19 Vaccine Damage

Commonly reported side effects among recipients of the Pfizer and Moderna mRNA vaccines include:

Persistent malaise13,14 and extreme exhaustion15

Persistent headache and migraine onset16

Severe allergic, including anaphylactic reactions17,18,19

Multisystem inflammatory syndrome20

Seizures and convulsions21,22

Paralysis,23 including Bell's Palsy24

Swollen lymph nodes25

Sudden death within hours or days26,27,28,29,30

Many of these symptoms are suggestive of neurological damage. According to Mikovits, this is precisely what you'd expect, as these conditions are caused by neuroinflammation, a dysregulated innate immune response and/or disrupted endocannabinoid system.

Long term, Mikovits predicts we'll see a significant uptick in migraines, tics, Parkinson's disease, microvascular disorders, cancers, severe pain syndromes like fibromyalgia and rheumatoid arthritis, bladder problems, kidney disease, psychosis, neurodegenerative diseases such as Lou Gehrig's disease (ALS) and sleep disorders.

What to Do if You Got the Vaccine and Are Having Problems

If you got the vaccine and now regret it, you may be able to address your symptoms using the same strategies you'd use to treat actual SARS-CoV-2 infection.

I've written many articles over the past year detailing simple strategies to improve your immune system, and with a healthy immune system, you'll get through COVID-19 without incident. Below, I'll summarize some of the strategies you can use both to prevent COVID-19 and address any side effects you may encounter from the vaccine.

• Eat a "clean," ideally organic diet. Avoid processed foods of all kinds, especially vegetable oils, as they are loaded with damaging omega-6 linoleic acid that wrecks your mitochondrial function. Linoleic acid has been shown to increase mortality from COVID-19.

• Consider nutritional ketosis and time-restricted eating, both of which will help you optimize your metabolic machinery and mitochondrial function.

• Implement a detoxification program to get rid of heavy metals and glyphosate. This is important as these toxins contribute to inflammation. To improve detoxification, I recommend activating your natural glutathione production with molecular hydrogen tablets.

A simple way to block glyphosate uptake is to take glycine. Approximately 3 grams, about half a teaspoon, a few times a day should be sufficient, along with an organic diet, so that you're not adding more glyphosate with each meal.

• Maintain a neutral pH to improve the resiliency of your immune system. You want your pH to be right around 7, which you can measure with an inexpensive urine strip. The lower your pH, the more acidic you are. A simple way to raise your pH if it's too acidic (and most people are) is to take one-fourth teaspoon of sodium bicarbonate (baking soda) or potassium bicarbonate in water a few times a day.

Nutritional supplementation can also be helpful. Among the most important are:

Vitamin D — Vitamin D supplements are readily available and one of the least expensive supplements on the market. All things considered, vitamin D optimization is likely the easiest and most beneficial strategy that anyone can do to minimize their risk of COVID-19 and other infections, and can strengthen your immune system in a matter of a few weeks.

N-acetylcysteine (NAC) — NAC is a precursor to reduced glutathione, which appears to play a crucial role in COVID-19. According to one literature analysis,31 glutathione deficiency may actually be associated with COVID-19 severity, leading the author to conclude that NAC may be useful both for its prevention and treatment.

Zinc — Zinc plays a very important role in your immune system's ability to ward off viral infections. Like vitamin D, zinc helps regulate your immune function32 — and a combination of zinc with a zinc ionophore, like hydroxychloroquine or quercetin, was in 2010 shown to inhibit SARS coronavirus in vitro. In cell culture, it also blocked viral replication within minutes.33 Importantly, zinc deficiency has been shown to impair immune function.34

Melatonin — Boosts immune function in a variety of ways and helps quell inflammation. Melatonin may also prevent SARS-CoV-2 infection by recharging glutathione35 and enhancing vitamin D synthesis, among other things.

Vitamin C — A number of studies have shown vitamin C can be very helpful in the treatment of viral illnesses, sepsis and ARDS,36 all of which are applicable to COVID-19. Its basic properties include anti-inflammatory, immunomodulatory, antioxidant, antithrombotic and antiviral activities. At high doses, it actually acts as an antiviral drug, actively inactivating viruses. Vitamin C also works synergistically with quercetin.37

Quercetin — A powerful immune booster and broad-spectrum antiviral, quercetin was initially found to provide long to realize the Marxists had the plan laid out and were well embedded in the social networks of America, especially the unions and schools. And were working their way into the churches. While the Marxists were making the way into the culture of America, the globalists were setting up the Federal Reserve Bank (1913) and the League of Nations (forerunner to the United Nations) (1920), as their greatest tools to achieve world dominance.

To misquote an old phrase, "The one with the most money wins". The globalist contingent, being in control of the major banks in the western world, had the most money. They decided they could get what they needed from the cultural Marxists, by funding their work in the schools and unions. Under the Carnegie, Ford, and Rockefeller Foundations, the cultural Marxists were able to, not only design better models of brainwashing, but to cover far more areas than they would have on their own. A match made in hell.

And all this time, the Right, conservatives, and libertarians were either asleep at the wheel or already succumbing to the siren lure of the Left. Even after having been told the truth, in the Dodd Report to the Reece Commission, for one, as well as the Interviews of Yuri Bezmenov, an ex-KGB officer and Soviet defector. Many books have exposed the cultural Marxist goal, here are just a very few of many:

Kostler's Darkness at Noon
Krebs' Out of the Night
Kravchenko's I Chose Freedom
Chamber's Witness
Burnham's Struggle for the World
And, of course, Animal Farm and 1984

Yet, we are doing nothing to bring back our republic or reestablish adherence to the Rule of Law and the Constitution. Why is that? With permission, the authors of Re-remembering the Mis-Remembered Left, Stephen Coughlin and Richard Higgins have answered this question – and you aren't going to like it, but it is God's honest truth:

As far back as Marx there is the recognition that Hegel's dialectic does not advance cultures under its sway but rather nihilizes them. From this recognition, Marx called for a critical philosophy to tear down Western culture and a proletariat of middle-class nihilists to do so. From Marx to Alinsky, one does not have to be religious to recognize the dark, destructive nihilist strain that runs through the Left as characterized by numerous homages to Satan, et al.

Today, Marx's philosophical criticism manifests itself as the Frankfurt School's critical theory which Herbert Marcuse's repressive tolerance operationalized as one of the more prominent manifestations of it in America today.

Every aspect of the Left that threatens America today has its genesis in Marxist-inspired programs: from the critical theory of the Frankfurt School to the united front efforts of the Soviet-led Comintern that, in the 1930s, formed Antifa, to the precursor to BLM, to interfaith penetration and more. Moreover, they are the foreseeable progressions of the Left's historic mission.

The current state of conventional analysis on the Left is marooned in a pseudo-reality sustained by the archaic political language already identified. As such, strategic awareness of the Left is non-existent and current constructions are intensely reactive, localized and tactical. They are under-inclusively defective—and dangerously so.

To re-remember the misremembered Left, this analysis adopts the political warfare model used by Mao to implement Marxism in his successful long march effort to control China. The Maoist insurgency model also happens to be the execution strategy American Marxists like Marcuse publicly adopted as their strategy in the early 1970s.

Political Warfare recognizes the role narratives play in overwhelming a rule of law society. Mass line movements and counter-state activities utilize narratives at the cultural level. The final objective is to power down into the political space. There, fidelity to the narrative will result in non-enforcement of the law. Over time, this non-enforcement will become institutionalized. By imposing narratives on the opposition, the Left gains influence first and control later. Thus, the abuse of language results in a controlled opposition that then leads to an abuse of power. Political warfare strategies are intensely dialectical, seeking the isolation of American values that are then negated through a relentless process of dialectical negation—Aufheben der Kultur.

In sum, mainstream Americans and conservatives are incapable of mounting a strategic response. The Left has successfully positioned America to play the role it scripted for it.

As such, this analysis recommends that a group be immediately assembled and resourced to fully develop the Left's scheme of operation that executes strategic, operational, and tactical level responses. In this context, countering the Left must include responses directed at the dialectical engines, the inherent statism, the scientism, and the information dominance sustained by narratives. All of the above should be executed through the same political warfare lines of effort as counter mass line efforts.

We face an existential threat. As President Obama made clear, the Left is within 10 to 20 years of realizing the fruits of its long march through America. As a final recommendation: take the red pill now. The question is not whether it will be taken, but rather at what level of pain.

Yes, we are in dire straits, yet few understand the threat.

We must go back to the origins of Cancel Culture and why Western Culture and Christianity must be erased, from parts 1 and 2, Why do Western Culture and Christianity both have to be annihilated? Western Culture represents the reasoning, logical, fair and openminded aspects of our world. Out of Western Culture sprang the United States Constitution, the framework of the nation. And the Christian religious traditions, especially the Ten Commandments, are the underlying pillars of Western Culture. As Antonio Gramsci wrote in his prison notebooks, "Any country grounded in Judaeo-Christian values can't be overthrown until those roots are cut … Socialism is precisely the religion that must overwhelm Christianity … in the new order, Socialism will triumph by first capturing the culture via infiltration of schools, universities, churches and the media by transforming the consciousness of society."

Christianity is the crux. It is the only thing now standing between communism and liberty. Those who formed and honed Aufheben der Kultur/Cancel Culture were well aware of this. Marx set out to eradicate Christianity. "The social principles of Christianity preach cowardice, self-contempt, abasement, submission, humility, in a word all the qualities of the canaille—Karl Marx and Friedrich Engels on Religion (ed. 1957)

The democratic concept of man is false, because it is Christian. The democratic concept holds that … each man is a sovereign being. This is the illusion, dream, and postulate of Christianity. Marx

"America is like a healthy body and its resistance is threefold: its patriotism, its morality, and its spiritual life. If we can undermine these three areas, America will collapse from within." Joseph Stalin

The Marxists and globalists have been busy for all these decades attacking the church and Western Culture from without and within. We are well aware of the attacks from the outside – removing school prayer (even a minute of silence), the Pledge of Allegiance, the National Anthem. Not allowing religious after-school groups while supporting any and all others. The Five Pillars of Islam and the prayer to Allah are taught in the schools. But a child wanting to do a report of her favorite hero, God, is forbidden and she was ordered by the teacher "to take her paper off school property immediately because just having it in the classroom where her classmates might see it could violate the First Amendment. Some students overheard the teacher rebuking Erin and later mocked her for believing in God." David Horowitz, Dark Agenda, The War to Destroy Christian America, pp 47-8

"New York City is one of many school systems in the United States set to roll out Black Lives Matter (BLM)-themed lesson plans this fall. According to the NYC Department of Education, teachers will delve into "systemic racism," police brutality, and white privilege in their classrooms.

"North Carolina's largest school system in Wake County launched a website this summer that provides BLM lessons for teachers to use in classrooms and for parents to use at home. The website, created by the school system's Office of Equity Affairs, encourages teachers to "address the injustices that exist beyond education by the conversations we have with others, by speaking up when we see hate, by supporting efforts that oppose racism and oppression, and by directly engaging in advocacy work."

"Fundamental Bible-believing people do not have the right to indoctrinate their children in their religious beliefs because we, the state, are preparing them for the year 2000, when America will be part of a one-world global society and their children will not fit in." Former Nebraska State Senator Peter Hoagland, radio interview, 1983.

Environmental degradation has been the banner used to attack Christianity since the early 1960s. There are more than enough articles at American Policy Center to explain this. And books galore, here are just a few:

Dr. Michael S. Coffman's Saviors of the Earth?
Ron Arnold's, Trashing the Economy
Brian Sussman's Eco-TYRANNY
There are hundreds more.

Lynn White, Jr., Professor of History at the University of California, wrote an article for Science magazine titled "The Historical Roots of Our Ecologic Crisis", in which he said: "What we do about ecology depends on our ideas of the man-nature relationship. More science and more technology are not going to get us out of the present ecological crisis until we find a new religion, or rethink the old one. . .. as we now recognize, somewhat over a century ago science and technology . . . joined to give mankind powers which are out of control. If so, Christianity bears a huge burden of guilt. . . . Our science and technology have grown out of Christian attitudes toward man's relationship to nature.

"No new set of basic values has been accepted in our society to displace those of Christianity. Hence, we shall continue to have a worsening ecological crisis until we reject the Christian axion that nature has no reason for existence save to serve man.

"By destroying pagan animism, Christianity made it possible to exploit nature in a mood of indifference to the feelings of natural objects. . . . The spirits in natural objects, which formerly had protected nature from man, evaporated." pp. 5-6

That's some of the frontal s The insidious attacks from within the churches are what will 'win the day' for Cancel Culture and the cancelling of liberty, if not dealt with soon. It goes all the way to the top of many of the different sects of Christianity.

Those who have been leading us to a world government understand that the beliefs of the people must be erased and replaced in order to exchange the old religions with one that will allow the world leaders to control the worshippers. Bishop William Swing, founder of the United Religions Initiative (URI), decided that, "Since the purpose of religion is the service and worship of God, all religions and spiritual movements need to have a common language and common purpose – for all to worship a shared god." (emphasis mine) William E Swing, 7th Bishop of the Episcopal Diocese of California.

"According to a Vatican statement issued on Thursday, Sept. 12, the Pope is inviting representatives of the main religions, international organizations and various humanitarian institutions, as well as key figures from the world of politics, economics and academia, and prominent athletes, scientists and sociologists to sign a "Global Pact on Education" so as to "hand on to younger generations a united and fraternal common home."

"A global educational pact is needed to educate us in universal solidarity and a new humanism," Francis said in a video message to launch the initiative." LifeSite, Feb. 13, 2019

A Protestant pastor in Bremen, Germany preached that Christ is the only way to heaven, and now he is the talk of the town. The people are not praising him — Pastor Olaf Latzel is being accused of disparaging other religions, and the prosecuting attorney of Bremen is considering filing charges against him. Pastor Latzel's sermon was delivered to his congregation on January 18, 2015.

What we are seeing is exactly what Mary Parker Follett stated was necessary to bring about the New State (see part 5). She concludes, "It is a long way from the maxim, 'Religion is an affair between man and his Maker," to the cry of Mazzini, "Italy is itself a religion," but we surely today have come to see in the social bond and the Creative Will, a compelling power, a depth and force, as great as that of any religion we have ever known. We are ready for a new revelation of God. It is not coming through any single man, but through the men and women who are banding together with one purpose, in one consecrated service for a great fulfilment. . .. We need a new faith in humanity, not a sentimental faith or a theological tenet or philosophical conception, but an active faith in that creative power of men which shall shape government and industry, which shall give form equally to our daily life with our neighbor and to a world league. The New State, pp. 359, 360.

In 1993, the National Religious Partnership for the Environment (NRPE) announced a $5million program with the Mount Gilead Baptist Church in Washington, D.C., to "underscore the connection between addressing issues of poverty and the environment. The Partnership is a formal agreement among four of the nation's largest religious organizations: US Catholic Conference, National Council of Churches of Christ, Coalition on the Environment and Jewish life, and Evangelical Environmental Network – with the Union of Concerned Scientists (look them up, if you don't know this evil group) as a special consultant. Paul Gorman, Executive Director of the Partnership said, ". . . how people of faith engage the environmental crisis will have much to do with the future well-being of the planet, and in all likelihood, with the future of religious life as well."

Then there is the Temple of Understanding, founded in 1960, and which is housed at the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, in New York City. It included the Dalai Lama, Jawaharlal Nehru, Pope John XXIII, Eleanor Roosevelt, Anwar el-Sadat, Dr. Albert Sweitzer, U.N. Secretary-General U Thant among others. It set up a series of "Spiritual Summit Conferences that were held around the world, and included Geneva, Calcutta, Harvard, Princeton and Cornell Universities, and at the Cathedral of St. John the Divine. In 1984, a meeting was held on Mount Sinai to "thrash out an inter-religious consensus. Assistant U.N. Secretary-General, Robert Muller, was asked to draft a "Declaration of the Unity of World Religions". "At the Parliament of the World's Religions in Chicago in 1993, one of the main lectures was entitled 'A Proposal To Evolve the Parliament Toward a United Nations of Religions'. In this keynote speech, United Nations executive Dr. Robert Muller called for the establishment of a permanent World Council of Religion by 1995, along the lines of the United Nations. Although a number of delegates were skeptical about the setting up of an actual World Council of Religion, it was generally felt that this Parliament brought the global interfaith movement one step nearer to much closer collaboration.

Pope's Council on Capitalism Should Instead Address Corrupt Governments

By Lawrence McQuillan

Pope Francis has launched a partnership between the Vatican and some of the world's largest companies, nonprofits and government agencies to reform capitalism.

The Council for Inclusive Capitalism with the Vatican is led by Guardians for Inclusive Capitalism, a group of officials representing such entities as the Bank of America, BP, Dupont, the Ford Foundation, Mastercard, Merck, the Rockefeller Foundation, Salesforce, Visa and the State of California.

Under the Pope's guidance, these "guardians" aim to "reform capitalism into a powerful force for the good of humanity" and create a "more inclusive, sustainable and trusted form of capitalism." Too bad they've missed the reality that capitalism doesn't need reforming and is already the most inclusive economic system in the world.

Under capitalism anyone can start a business and pursue their dreams, subject to basic laws governing fraud, theft and contracts. People are free to negotiate wage rates and set prices to compete in the marketplace. Entrepreneurs are free to invest capital, innovate with new technology, trade globally and hire the best employees. If schools are rotten or banks discriminate racially, entrepreneurs can launch competing operations.

Unfortunately, governments around the world do not allow free-market capitalism to flourish. They impose barriers to vigorous competition through occupational licensing, minimum wages, bank charters, housing restrictions, protections for government schools and incumbent healthcare providers, confiscatory taxes and even laws that oppress specific ethnic and religious groups.

It is cronyism that excludes participants, not free-market capitalism, which is inclusionary and also the fairest economic system.

The principle 'you keep what you earn, and I keep what I earn' is socially just. Problems arise when governments take wealth or income from one group and give it to another group that did not earn it only because the recipients have sufficient votes, campaign contributions, or political power. This is not fair, but Pope Francis supports it, calling for more "redistribution of economic benefits by the State" based on his false zero-sum view that poor people are poor because rich people are rich.

Government redistribution does not nurture a caring society or compassionate people. Instead, it pits one group against another, tearing apart the social fabric, creating disharmony and a culture of dependency, all while shrinking the economic pie. True compassion means self-sacrifice, 'to suffer with,' which equals private charity, chosen freely, to help those in need. There's nothing compassionate about using the government to seize one person's money to give it to someone else.

Free-market capitalism is also rooted in private property rights, which promote sustainability. When an asset is owned privately—a house, car, business, natural resource, etc.—the owner considers the effect of current actions on the future value of the asset. Private property rights align incentives with forward-looking resource stewardship.

Problems arise—known as the "tragedy of the commons"—when private property rights are not fully defined or enforcement is lacking. Then degradation occurs in the form of air pollution, water pollution, overfishing, species extinction, out-of-control wildfires, water misuse, and rampant deforestation. Those problems result from socialized property, not free-market capitalism. Francis and his new partners do not recognize this important distinction.

Capitalism is the greatest wealth creator the world has seen, lifting more than a billion people out of abject poverty during the past three decades alone. Wealth must first be created before it can be used to help others. It is always better to have more wealth when attempting to solve a problem, especially poverty, pollution, poor schools and disease.

Rooted in private property rights and uncorrupted competitive markets, capitalism is inclusive, fair, sustainable and the best hope for peaceful prosperity and human dignity. Pope Francis and the council should unleash capitalism worldwide and work to reform corrupt governments that deprive people of its blessings.

Thorner: World's Deadliest Virus isn't COVID, it's Communism

By Nancy Thorner

"Never let a crisis go to waste", voiced Barack Obama's Chief of Staff Rahm Emanuel in 2008. And this is what Democrats aim to do, perhaps by the end of the week, by stuffing the Covid relief bill full of all kinds of pork, just not for the Americans who need it. "Covid relief" will be just an excuse for give aways to every Democrat interest group."

There is also a major conflict of interest. The Biden administration has waived ethics rules to allow a top Department of Homeland Security official, Charanya Krishnaswami, senior counselor to DHS Secretary Alejandro Mayorkas, to make policy in areas on which she lobbied for her former employer, Amnesty International. Had the same thing happened under Trump, it would have received wall-to-wall coverage.

It does make sense in a Biden Administration that a former member of Amnesty International can do no wrong. Uniparty Biden needs every crumb he can give to a very restive Left after the "stimulus" money runs out.

World's Deadliest Virus

As D. Wells relates in his 2/22/21 article, The Deadliest Virus in the World is COMMUNISM:

"Everything about the "new norm" in America is modeled after Communist China. Most Americans think it's all about protection from Covid-19, but that's just the cover story, just like 9/11 was a cover story for the Patriot Act to enable the US government to spy on every American and disable constitutional rights.

Under a communist regime, the people are not allowed to have personalities, businesses, religion, healthy social interactions, or more money than each other.

Everyone is poor so everyone is the same – subservient to a tyrannical government that ends creativity, entrepreneurship, believing in God, speaking your mind, and printing opinions about the government.

That's why Covid is the perfect front for the installation of communism in America. With masks on, we can't see each other's expressions, or smiles, or even have normal conversations.

With social distancing, we are not united or organically working together. Instead we are virtual. We eat GMOs. We are being genetically mutated with vaccines, and it can never be undone.

The corporations are running small and medium-sized businesses out of business, and the plandemic is the perfect storm as the excuse, so Americans won't rise up and overthrow the regime, before it's too late."

Sweden and Covid

Paul Joe Watson in his article of 2/18/2020, No lockdown Sweden sees COVID deaths plummet quicker that UK, relates:

"COVID deaths in Sweden began dropping off even sooner without the need for harsh lockdowns. This is just another great example that lockdowns are ineffective against the virus. The lockdowns, masks and social distancing arguably cause more unnecessary deaths and suffering among people than the virus itself - now and in the future, as the effects play out in time"

On May 5, 2020 Dennis Prager wrote a column titled, The Worldwide Lockdown May Be the Greatest Mistake in History. As to the economic catastrophe in the United States and around the world, said Prager, "It is panic and hysteria, not the coronavirus that created this catastrophe."

Four months later in a September 3, 2020 column The Lockdown Has Gone From a Mistake to a Crime, Prager wrote: "The world should have followed Sweden's example. That country never locked down and has even kept children younger than 16 in school the entire time."

"A Reuters reported that three separate studies, including one by UNICEF, "showed that Swedish children fared better than children in other countries during the pandemic, both in terms of education and mental health."

"Regarding teachers, Sweden's Public Health Agency reported that "a comparison of the incidence of COVID-19 in different professions suggested no increased risk for teachers."

More about Covid vaccine

Following is an interesting recent report from the UK about the first data on the UK Covid vaccine rollout: "The first data suggests it is having a "spectacular" impact on stopping serious illness, researchers say. Within weeks, one shot reduces the risk of being admitted to hospital by at least three-quarters for the over 80's."

But as Martin Armstrong pointed out in his article posted February 22, 2021, Vaccine Concerns That They Call Conspiracy Theory Getting Back to Normal, "this is just propaganda, not science."

According to an article in Lifesite News on Feb 29, 2021: "Cell lines derived from aborted babies used in the production or testing of various vaccines, including a number of COVID vaccines, most likely came from babies who were aborted alive."

Communism in America

As referenced by D. Wells in his 2/22/21 article, The Deadliest Virus in the World is COMMUNISM :

"We are being trained, corralled and ostracized like huge herds of cattle or sheep. The masks, social distancing, and virtual "distance learning" keeps us isolated and stripped from thinking as a group. No more planning for the peons. No critical thinking. We'll all be too weak, poor and isolated from each other to rebel."

"Are you wondering why there's a fake race war going on, led by Antifa?

Because upheaval convinces the masses to accept martial law for protection, and that is the end of our Republic. All of social media, television news, and every newspaper is in on it — sold out to Communism, the new highest bidder."

"There was a Holocaust in Russia before Germany, in case you didn't know, and it was a very dark, cruel world. So realize and remember this: Masks, social distancing and virtual learning are really about the installation of COMMUNISM in America."

Will You Obey the Criminal Authoritarians?

By Dr. Joseph Mercola

In 1962, in a now infamous experiment shown in the video above, Yale University psychologist Stanley Milgram tested the limits of human obedience to authority

The Milgram experiment was conducted following the trial of Nazi Adolf Eichmann, who used the Nuremberg defense, or "befehl ist befehl," which translates to "an order is an order"

The Milgram experiment clearly showed that people would act against their own judgment and harm another person to extreme lengths simply because they were told to do so

With societal norms rapidly changing, and an increasingly authoritative environment emerging, it raises the question of whether or not the public will continue to blindly obey criminal authoritarians, no matter the consequences

In 1962, in a now infamous experiment shown in the video above, Yale University psychologist Stanley Milgram tested the limits of human obedience to authority. The study administrator instructed the study subjects — the "teachers" — to give electric shocks to a student.

The "student" was actually an actor, but the study subjects were unaware of this, and complied with the demands to shock him whenever he gave an incorrect response to a question. Even as the student moaned, begged for the shocks to stop and ultimately stopped responding, the subjects obeyed the authority figure in the room and issued painful electric shocks.

The subjects were clearly uncomfortable with the task at times, but still continued, showing that people may carry out heinous acts when ordered to do so by authorities because they feel less responsible for the behavior in this capacity.1

With societal norms rapidly changing, and an increasingly authoritative environment emerging, it raises the question of whether or not the public will continue to blindly obey criminal authoritarians, no matter the consequences.

'An Order Is an Order'

The Milgram experiment was conducted following the trial of Nazi Adolf Eichmann, who used the Nuremberg defense, or "befehl ist befehl," which translates to "an order is an order." The Milgram experiment clearly showed that people would act against their own judgment and harm another person to extreme lengths simply because they were told to do so.

The subjects first experienced a 45-volt shock themselves — so they would know what it felt like — then administered the shocks in increasing intervals. They were labeled from 15 to 450 volts — from slight shock all the way up to "extreme intensity shock," "danger: severe shock," and the strongest voltage, "XXX." According to Gregorio Billikopf Encina with the University of California:2

"In response to the supposed jolts, the 'learner' (actor) would begin to grunt at 75 volts; complain at 120 volts; ask to be released at 150 volts; plead with increasing vigor, next; and let out agonized screams at 285 volts.

Eventually, in desperation, the learner was to yell loudly and complain of heart pain. At some point the actor would refuse to answer any more questions. Finally, at 330 volts the actor would be totally silent — that is, if any of the teacher participants got so far without rebelling first."

Ultimately, 65% of the subjects continued through the study and administered the maximum voltage level, even though they knew it was wrong. Encina noted:

"Participants demonstrated a range of negative emotions about continuing. Some pleaded with the learner, asking the actor to answer questions carefully. Others started to laugh nervously and act strangely in diverse ways. Some subjects appeared cold, hopeless, somber, or arrogant. Some thought they had killed the learner.

Nevertheless, participants continued to obey, discharging the full shock to learners. One man who wanted to abandon the experiment was told the experiment must continue. Instead of challenging the decision of the experimenter, he proceeded, repeating to himself, 'It's got to go on, it's got to go on."

The Milgram experiment was later criticized for being unethical and in the U.S. studies that cause subjects serious distress were later banned. However, similar studies in Europe confirmed the results, suggesting that people will willingly and blindly obey authoritarian orders, especially if they feel disconnected from their actions.

We Must Not Surrender to Lockdowns

Case in point: lockdowns. The initial lockdowns were intended to flatten the COVID-19 curve, but even after that happened, lockdowns continued, sometimes two and three times. With each lockdown, society grew more distant, more accepting of isolation and, often, more fearful.

"The first lockdown felt novel; this one — the third — feels onerous," Brendan O'Neill, editor of spiked, wrote. "The first encouraged us to remove ourselves from society but to still think and behave as members of society: Sign up to be an NHS volunteer, deliver medicines to the old, phone a mate and check if he's OK. This one discourages all forms of social connection."4

What began as a feeling of coming together with a shared hope that soon we'd be back to rubbing shoulders and shaking hands has morphed into a culture of fear, O'Neill argues, that has us looking at others as vectors of disease rather than human beings:5

"The shift from paying lip service to social solidarity to encouraging the populace to think of itself as diseased represents a victory for the degraded view of humanity gifted to us by the culture of fear.

The government's early move from encouraging people to take responsibility for limiting their social interactions to using older methods of terror to ensure compliance with lockdown measures confirmed the culture of fear's reduction of people from citizens to be engaged with to problems to be managed."

Once COVID-19 dwindles, and talk of the pandemic is no longer making headlines, the threat of the "New Normal" will remain — and in many ways it represents an even bigger threat than physical disease. As O'Neill writes:6

"Those who underestimate the culture of fear will be ill-prepared for these future battles. They will have a tendency to surrender to the New Normal. The rest of us should stand firm, even in the face of smears and wilful misrepresentations, and continue to recognise and confront the real and debilitating consequences that fear has on everyday life and on humanity's future."

What We Lose Is Exponentially Harder to Get Back

It's essential that your Constitutional rights and civil liberties be safeguarded against unlawful government overreach. Yet many are willingly giving up freedoms that, once gone, may be difficult, if not impossible, to get back. Vaccine passports are just one example.

By showing proof that you've received a COVID-19 vaccine, through a digital certificate or app on your phone, the hope is that you can once again board an airplane and travel freely, attend a concert or enjoy a meal in your favorite restaurant, just like you used to.

Except, being required to present your "papers" in order to live your life isn't actually freedom at all — it's a loss of personal liberty that you once had, one that disappeared right before your eyes and one that's setting the stage for increased surveillance and erosion of your privacy.

"Once your civil liberties are lost, they are difficult to regain," the Bozeman Daily Chronicle pointed out. "While it is the duty of government to protect the health and welfare of society, this must be balanced against the potential permanent loss of individual liberties."7 But right now we're facing a battle of freedom versus tyranny.

"No constitutional right is secure if it conflicts with the orthodoxy of the day," the Bozeman Daily Chronicle continued. "To governments it often is not a question of policy but an exercise of power to order submission to restrictions that obviate fundamental freedoms."8

Long Term Lockdowns Are Child and Elder Abuse

Public acknowledgment of the harms of lockdowns is still lacking, even as anecdotal reports are pouring in of children and teenagers who have committed suicide over the stress and isolation the lockdowns have caused.9

A Penn State news release highlighted the tragedy, with Dr. Taranjeet Jolly, a psychiatrist at Penn State Health's Milton S. Hershey Medical Center, stating, "'We've seen an upsurge in really bad suicide attempts' — and the pandemic is likely behind that increase," the press release goes on to say.10

Children and adolescents with existing mental health issues may be particularly vulnerable to being pushed "over the edge" due to social isolation during the pandemic, Jolly said, adding that family dysfunction and parents' worries — about finances, health and news — trickling down to children also adds to the risks.

Older adults are also struggling, including those who faced lockdowns while living in a long-term care facility. Deprived of social interaction, family visits, meals with friends and activity, many lost the will to live, with loved ones describing accelerated health declines.

"I don't think she's deteriorating I know she is," Judith Gimbel told AARP about her 95-year-old mother living in an assisted living facility in New Jersey. "She's dying a slow death in there."11

For those with loved ones suffering from dementia and living in memory care facilities, the lockdown can be especially traumatic, as their loved ones may not understand their absence or know why they're in quarantine. Social isolation is also a known detriment to people with dementia.

"The whole issue of isolation is huge right now," Doug Pace, director of mission partnerships for the Alzheimer's Association, told National Geographic. "Loneliness, helplessness and boredom, we know, is something that, even in normal times, can really affect the quality of life of someone with dementia."12

A report by the Well Being Trust (WBT) and the Robert Graham Center for Policy Studies in Family Medicine and Primary Care estimated that up to 75,000 people may die during the COVID-19 pandemic from drug or alcohol misuse and suicide — so-called "deaths of despair."13

Are Important Lessons From History Being Forgotten?

The book "Five Chimneys" is a Holocaust memoir written by Olga Lengyel, who was kept as a prisoner in Auschwitz. She describes the nightmare of experimental drugs and vaccines being tested on prisoners and white powder sprinkled on food to interfere with hormones and fertility.

The German company Bayer is specifically mentioned for sending vials of drugs without labels to be used in the experiments, some of which included sterilization and sex changes. Given their crimes against humanity, it's shocking that a company like Bayer is still around today and, not only that, but is a major force in the food industry, having acquired Monsanto in 2018 for $63 billion.14

As poignantly noted in the video above, it's essential to pay attention and learn from the mistakes and lessons of history, lest we be doomed to repeat them.

COVID Accelerated Plans to Take Away Everything, Even Rights

Top political figures and Big Tech leaders are using the common refrain that the COVID-19 pandemic has provided an opportunity to "reset" and "build back better." "Build back better" is a tagline of sorts for the Great Reset, and though this is being played off as a new initiative, it's simply a rebranding of terms for technocracy and the old "New World Order."

An elite oligarchy is behind this technocratic plan to govern society through technology, programmed by scientists and technicians and automated through the use of artificial intelligence, rather than through democratically elected politicians and government leaders.

The current pandemic is being used as a justification for the movement, but the agenda has nothing to do with your health and everything to do with a long-term plan to monitor and control the world through technical surveillance. Part of the "new normal" dictum is that you will own nothing and be happy.

The unstated implication is that the world's resources will be owned and controlled by the technocratic elite, and you'll have to pay for the temporary use of absolutely everything. Nothing will actually belong to you. All items and resources are to be used by the collective, while actual ownership is restricted to an upper stratum of social class.

And, the wealth transfer has already begun. Most big businesses are coming out of the lockdowns largely unscathed, and in most cases with radically increased profits. Contrast this with the 48% of small businesses that are challenged with the threat of closing permanently.15

Meanwhile, as millions of people struggle with unemployment and financial insecurity due to the COVID-19 pandemic, the richest have gotten even richer. The Institute for Policy Studies (IPS), in partnership with Americans for Tax Fairness (ATF), published a report highlighting what they call America's "pre-existing condition": extreme wealth inequality.16

IPS is regularly updating U.S. unemployment and billionaire wealth during the pandemic, which shows the great divide among the wealthy and the majority of Americans. A number of striking inequalities are revealed by the report, such as:17

Jeff Bezos's fortune increased by $25

Dr. David Ramage, who chaired the Parliament, saw the next step as one of "setting up centres of interfaithism in various key regions of the world and then networking relationships between them. However, others saw the setting up of a global religious council as a very real possibility during the next few years."

Thomas Berry, a priest and "geologian", believed that the world is being called to a new 'post-denominational', even a post-Christian belief system that sees the earth as a living being – mythologically, as Gaia, Mother Earth – with mankind as her consciousness. That the world is experiencing a new enlightenment of a greater magnitude than Copernicus' discovery that the earth actually revolved around the sun. . . that the traditional Christian view of an external god who created man in His image is as wrong as the pre-Copernican view of the sun revolving around the earth . . . that humans have no special place in the universal community of life which is, collectively, the manifestation of the divine." The Dream of the Earth, 1990.

I could add 10,000 more points, but you see what is happening here. There are also all the stories of the cultural Marxists infiltrating Christian churches and, literally, taking over (see Southern Baptist Conference). There are pastors who now say that they may be presiding over same-sex marriages. There are pastors who are not opening their churches because they are afraid of COVID. And there are so very many who are so afraid of losing their 501(c)3 status, that they do not mention these issues. They should have no fear on that account as long as they are not telling their parishioners specific candidates and bills to vote for. But they are quiet.

The answer to the quote above from "Re-remembering the Mis-Remembered Left, "In sum, mainstream Americans and conservatives are incapable of mounting a strategic response. The Left has successfully positioned America to play the role it scripted for it.

The people who must mount the attack are the pastors and priests who still believe the Bible is the word of God. They must first cleanse their churches of the enemy within, the cultural Marxists who have insidiously made their way into their houses of worship. And they must start preaching from the Bible; they must stick to the true word of God.

"George Washington was not only the leader of the Continental forces, he was also their Chaplain. Early in the war, Colonel Washington asked the fledgling Continental Congress to provide Chaplains for the troops engaged in the battle with the English Army. But none of the clergy were willing to step forward, either out of allegiance to the Anglican Church of England or outright fear. Washington, a life-long Christian and an ordained Vestryman in the Anglican (Episcopal) Church assumed the responsibility of serving in the dual role of Commander and Chaplain, conducting services weekly and leading in prayer on a daily basis. God's Chaplins don't always do the right thing. They are even hidden in caves, by the hundreds, by the Obadiahs of today's world while another, Elijah, alone, preaches the Word of God. Today's preachers and pastors need to crawl out of their man-caves, go to their pulpits, open the church doors and fight for God's word. (Related in a sermon and Bible study by Pastors David Koopman and John Peach.)

If they do that, maybe, just maybe, they will save Western Culture along with the Christian church.

They need to be shouting from their pulpits, defending those who are attacked for their beliefs, and they need to get on their knees and ask God's forgiveness for not tending to their flocks as they were instructed.

Master Manipulators

The transfer of wealth from average people to the richest through a planned economic collapse is ongoing, but due to masterful manipulation, most are unaware that this is occurring. Public deception is now being carried out at a mass scale, being led and organized by the PR firm the Publicis Groupe.

Publicis is a partner of the World Economic Forum, which is leading the call for a "reset" of the global economy and a complete overhaul of our way of life. As such, Publicis appears to be playing an important role, coordinating the suppression of information that runs counter to the technocratic narrative.

The role of the free press is to counter industry propaganda, but that role has been effectively subverted through advertising, as news outlets rarely report on something that might damage their advertisers.

Publicis has ties to the drug industry, banking industry, NewsGuard/HealthGuard, educational institutions, Big Tech companies like Google, Microsoft and Bing, the U.S. State Department and Department of Defense, global technocratic institutions like the World Health Organization, national and global NGOs and dominating health websites like WebMD and Medscape.

These connections, taken together, explain how certain views can be so effectively erased while other agendas are pushed forward. Often, it's simply a matter of "linguistic warfare."

Take Russell conjugation, which refers to a linguistic concept defined by Bertrand Russell in 1948. It's a form of spin, in which the factual meaning of words or a phrase remain the same but the emotional connotation is changed depending on which words are used.18

Take, for instance, "iron-willed" versus "pigheaded" or "snitch" versus "whistleblower." By altering words, you create a completely different perception of the same thing. The same concept is being used by the Great Reset agenda with phrases like "reinventing capitalism"19 and "build back better."

But the very purpose of "building back better" is to do away with what was once "normal" and replace it with something different that benefits an elite few. Wealthy technocrats, however, will not redistribute their own wealth during the reset, but will only continue to grow their financial empires as the rest of the world consents to giving up their privacy and ownership of everything, including their rights.20

Thinking back to the Milgram experiment, the question then becomes, when tested, who will you obey — your own moral compass, commonsense and reason or a criminal authority?

The Choice Is Yours

It is vital to understand that the vast majority of information you are exposed to in mainstream media is carefully designed propaganda crafted from nearly two decades of stolen personal data collected from you.

This data is then run through very sophisticated and advanced deep learning algorithms that are then able to accurately predict what will trigger your emotions to achieve their desired behavior.

As I have carefully identified in many previous articles, this plan will result in progressive loss in your freedom and liberty that eventually results in tyranny and slavery. So, be ever vigilant and seek the truth so you can understand reality well enough to distinguish between fact and a fictional narrative that promises to offer you liberation but, rather, eventually enslaves you.

Activist Milo Yiannopoulos is now 'Ex-Gay,' consecrating his life to St. Joseph

'Secular attempts at recovery from sin are either temporary or completely ineffective. Salvation can only be achieved through devotion to Christ and the works of the Holy, Catholic and Apostolic Church.'

By Doug Mainwaring

March 9, 2021 (LifeSiteNews) — Milo Yiannopoulos, the gay man whose conservative messaging and willingness to speak the truth sparked riots on university campuses may well trigger more outrage now that he describes himself as "Ex-Gay" and "sodomy free," and is leading a daily consecration to St. Joseph online.

Two years ago, when Church Militant's Michael Voris famously challenged Yiannopoulos to live a chaste life, Yiannopoulos was not defensive. Instead, he acquiesced, and humbly admitted his human weakness.

wcdm twitter

"I know everything you're saying, and I'm just not there yet. And I don't know if I'll get there," Yiannopoulos told Voris at the time.

It seems that he has now arrived "there."

LifeSite: I imagine that to many who follow you, your recent decision to publicly identify as "Milo, Ex-Gay" may seem like a 180-degree turn. Are you also surprised that your life has taken this turn? Or is it unsurprising, a natural and perhaps inevitable progression in your life? I ask this because over the last few years things that you've said have hinted at being drawn in this direction.

Milo: When I used to kid that I only became gay to torment my mother, I wasn't entirely joking. Of course, I was never wholly at home in the gay lifestyle — Who is? Who could be? — and only leaned heavily into it in public because it drove liberals crazy to see a handsome, charismatic, intelligent gay man riotously celebrating conservative principles.

That's not to say I didn't throw myself enthusiastically into degeneracy of all kinds in my private life. I suppose I felt that's all I deserved. I'd love to say it was all an act, and I've been straight this whole time, but even I don't have that kind of commitment to performance art. Talk about method acting …

LifeSite: Was there any event, or series of events, that triggered your decision to become "sodomy free," and to do so publicly? Did God knock you off your horse as he did Saul; or did it come about some other way? Please explain.

Milo: Four years ago, I gave an interview to America magazine which they declined to print. It's taken me a long time to live up to the claims I made in that interview, but I am finally doing it.

Anyone who's read me closely over the past decade must surely have seen this coming. I wasn't shy about dropping hints. In my New York Times-bestselling book Dangerous, I heavily hinted I might be "coming out" as straight in the future. And in my recent stream-of-consciousness Telegram feed, I've been even more explicit — stomach-churningly so, if the comments under my "x days without sodomy" posts are anything to go by.

I've always thought of myself as a Jack Bauer sort of figure — the guy who does the hideous, inexcusable things no one else can stomach, without which the Republic will fall. I know that means my name will always be cursed, and I'll always be a scorned outsider, so the temptation is to throw out any consideration of living well or truthfully. But even Jack Bauer has to confront his maker sooner or later.

LifeSite: Last summer you posted on Parler pictures of members of the CHANGED movement, with the caption, "Look at these beautiful souls, rid of their demons and cured of their sinful urges. Can't you tell they've been saved? I can." Are you now able to add your picture to theirs, with that same caption?

Milo: No, and I don't suppose I'll ever be brave enough to declare it a thing of the past. I treat it like an addiction. You never stop being an alcoholic. As for the CHANGED movement, I guess because they're Californian they don't see how funny their website is, or maybe they're dirty non-doms who think God loves you more the gayer you act, but I was slightly making fun of them with that caption. (Walker Percy was right: Modern man has two choices — Rome or California.)

Someone really ought to tell them to use more heterosexual-looking photos on their website. I can share some tips! My followers have been giving me a crash course in all-American straight guy aesthetics, which apparently include growing a mullet and learning to drive stick.

LifeSite: In what ways has this impacted your personal and social life?

Mother Mirium.png

Milo: Well, the guy I live with has been demoted to housemate, which hasn't been easy for either of us. It helps that I can still just about afford to keep him in Givenchy and a new Porsche every year. Could be worse for him, I guess.

My own life has changed dramatically, though it crept up on me while I wasn't paying attention. I'm someone who responds to micromanagement and accountability, so I've found counting days an effective bulwark against sin. In the last 250 days I've only slipped once, which is a lot better than I predicted I would do.

It feels as though a veil has been lifted in my house — like there's something more real and honest going on than before. It's been a gradual uncovering, rather than a dramatic reveal. Maybe that lack of theater or spectacle is a sign the gay impulses truly are receding?

The best metaphor I know is that of a flower blooming — of nature's Epiphany — an image I know Caryll Houselander was fond of. I think it was Houselander who said, "Whatever is loving in man and whatever is lovable in man is Christ in man." I take this to mean that the more love and the less lust in us, the more we cease to obscure Christ and instead reveal Him, in whose image we are made.

I don't mean to suggest it's been easy, just simple: Our Lord endured worse than any of us and promised us that we have to take up a heavy cross each day. Ronald Knox says the Via Crucis shows us the 3 ways we can carry our cross: With bitterness, like the unrepentant thief; with grim resignation, like the repentant thief who said it was what he deserved; or with love, like the Lord, who never minimized suffering but said it would, in God's time, redeem us.

Secretly, I feel I've done enough good in this life to excuse me from earthly penance for past sins. Your readers will no doubt respond, rightly, that this statement demonstrates how far I have to go. The best advice I can give others in my situation is: Check your pride, not your privilege. So often it's vanity or conceit or self-satisfaction that gets in the way of accepting Christ. Learn to catch it before it takes root, and difficult things suddenly don't seem so difficult.

LifeSite: What drew you to consecrate your life to St. Joseph?

Milo: Secular attempts at recovery from sin are either temporary or completely ineffective. Salvation can only be achieved through devotion to Christ and the works of the Holy, Catholic and Apostolic Church. St. Joseph is the spiritual father figure of the Holy Family. In this time of gender madness, devoting myself to the male protector of the infant Jesus is an act of faith in God's Holy Patriarch, and a rejection of the Terror of transsexuals. Trannies are demonic: They are the Galli, the castrated priests of Cybele, the Magna mater, whom Augustine saw dancing in the streets of Carthage dressed like women.

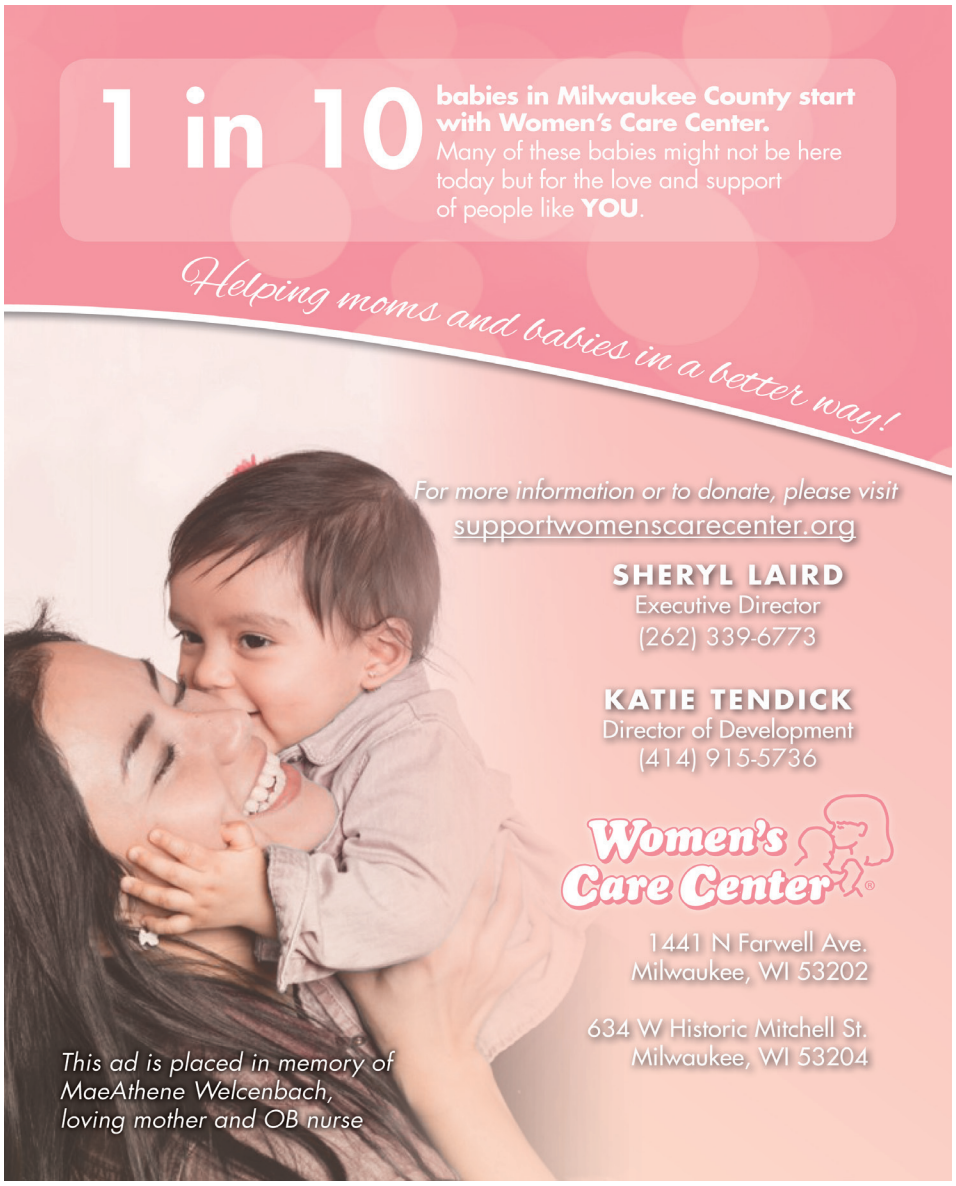
Don't even get me started on Drag Queen Story Hour. I only have to see those four words to be overwhelmed by the urge to buy rope.

LifeSite: Anything else you would like to add?

Milo: I have enjoyed a lifelong affection for the absurd and the outrageous, so part of me gleefully anticipates the day I can seize the moral high ground, however briefly, to denounce others for failures of piety and sobriety. I hope people will support and pray for me, if for no other reason than they share my delight at the prospect of Milo Yiannopoulos furiously and indignantly railing against homosexuals for sins of the flesh.

As you might expect, my professional priorities are shifting somewhat, given my new spiritual preoccupations. Over the next decade, I would like to help rehabilitate what the media calls "conversion therapy." It does work, albeit not for everybody. As for my other aspirations and plans, well, no change: I've always considered abortion to be the pre-eminent moral horror of human history. I'll keep saying so — even more loudly than before.

They say if you let one sin in, others will follow, and now I truly know what that means: As I've begun to resist sinful sexual urges, I've found myself drinking less, smoking less … you name it. I confess my weakness for designer shoes and handbags is yet to dissipate. But I am coming to realize, however slowly, that lust — per Augustine — is disordered desire for all sorts of things, not just NFL players.



VOICE OF JERUSALEM

Biden Abandons Middle East Peace

By Caroline Glick

The Trump administration was on the verge of securing a peace agreement between Israel and Indonesia in its final weeks in office, according to a former senior Trump administration official involved in the efforts. The official divulged that the negotiations between Israel and the world's most populous Muslim state were run by then-President Donald Trump's senior adviser Jared Kushner and Adam Boehler, then-head of the US's International Development Finance Corporation.

Israel was represented by then-Ambassador Ron Dermer and Indonesia by Minister Mohamed Lutfi. To secure peace, Boehler told Bloomberg News last December, the US would be willing to provide Indonesia with an additional "one or two billion dollars" in aid.

Indonesia was interested in Israeli technology and even wanted the Technion to open a campus in Jakarta. It wanted visa-free travel to Israel and Arab and US investment in its sovereign wealth fund. Israel wanted Indonesia to end its economic boycott of the Jewish state. Direct flights from Tel Aviv to Bali were on the table.

The advantages of peace between Israel and Indonesia for both sides are self-evident. But such a peace would also pay a huge dividend to the US in its burgeoning cold war with China. An expanded strategic and economic partnership with the archipelago and ASEAN member would be a setback for China's efforts to dominate the South China Sea, particularly with Indonesia playing a role in an Islamic-Israeli alliance led by the US.

"We got the ball on Indonesia and Israel to the first-yard line," the official explained. Unfortunately, the Biden administration has dropped the ball on the ground and walked off the field.

On the surface, the Biden administration is interested in promoting peace. President Biden and Secretary of State Antony Blinken have praised the Abraham Accords, as well they should.

For 26 years, the Arab conflict with Israel was ignored and left to fester. Then suddenly, in Trump's last year in office, the situation was reversed as four Arab states rapidly normalized their ties with Israel. Expanding the accords to Indonesia, with its massive population and strategic location outside the Middle East would transform a strategic regional shift into a game-changer throughout Asia.

But despite the strategic logic of expanding the Abraham Accords and the praise Biden and Blinken have given them, starting in its first week in office, the new administration's actions have served to undermine the accords by removing their American foundations.

A week into the Biden administration, the State Department announced it was "placing a hold" on the $23 billion sale of F-35s to the United Arab Emirates. The move was presented as "a routine administrative action typical to most any transition."

But suspending the sale was a strategic move, not an "administrative action." The normalization deal between Israel and the UAE was a three-sided agreement. The Americans were full participants. The F-35 sale was America's way to solidify the UAE's membership in an American-led regional alliance of which the Abraham Accords were an expression. Suspending the deal indicated that unlike its predecessor, the Biden administration will not work to strengthen the US alliance with the Sunni Arabs and Israel, and will not fulfill the commitments that the Trump administration took on to develop and maintain that alliance through Arab-Israeli peace.

Biden's abandonment of the Abraham Accords can be understood in the context of US politics. In keeping with the expectations of Democrat voters, Biden and his team are making efforts in domestic and foreign policy to erase the entirety of Trump's record in office. Although remaining a party to the Abraham Accords and expanding them to Indonesia and beyond would probably win Biden the Nobel Peace Prize, it would put him in the partisan doghouse for the crime of failing to kill something Trump created.

But while political logic exists, not everything is political. For Biden and his administration, ideology trumps politics.

The Biden administration is the most ideologically rigid and radical administration in US history. Hyper-partisan politics are a function of the administration's ideological radicalism. As far as the Middle East is concerned, its ideological commitments drive it to empower the PLO-controlled Palestinian Authority and Iran.

From their first days in office, senior Biden administration officials have pledged to restore US funding of the PA. There are significant legal roadblocks to implementing that pledge because so long as the PA continues to pay the salaries of terrorists and advances war crimes allegations against Israel before the International Criminal Court, the US is barred from funding it or reopening the PLO representative office in Washington. But all the same, the administration is intent on moving forward.

The administration's intense desire to empower the PA despite the legal roadblocks indicates one aspect of its opposition to the Abraham Accords. The accords weaken the PA by removing its power to block Arab and Islamic states from making peace with Israel.

For decades, as Israel's Palestinian "peace partner" spurned peace and waged terror and political war against Israel, the Arab states accepted that peace between themselves and Israel had to wait. By ignoring the US obligations to Abraham Accords partners and pushing to restore US support to the PA despite its illegality, the administration signals its desire to restore the Palestinian veto.

The Abraham Accords represent an even greater problem for the administration's efforts to empower Iran. In a speech on Monday, former secretary of state Mike Pompeo said, "The Abraham Accords would not have happened … without the United States changing its policy with respect to Iran 180 degrees from how the previous administration had addressed the issue."

Now that the Biden administration wishes to move US policy 180-degrees backward to reinstate the Obama administration's Iran policies, the Abraham Accords are a nuisance.

Hours before Biden and his advisers accused Saudi Crown Prince Mohammed Bin Salman (MBS) of approving Jamal Khashoggi's murder at the Saudi consulate in Istanbul in 2018, i24News reported that Israel, Saudi Arabia, the UAE and Bahrain were forming a military alliance against Iran. While the events may or may not be related, both make clear why the Biden administration doesn't want Arab-Israeli or Muslim-Israeli peace deals. The deals impede the administration's efforts to empower Iran.

Biden's declared goal vis-à-vis Iran is to restore Iranian compliance and US participation in the 2015 nuclear deal forged by the Obama administration. The so-called Joint Comprehensive Plan of Action places temporary limitations on Iranian nuclear activities in exchange for a massive inflow of capital. To convince Iranian leader Ali Khamenei to get on board, the new administration has provided a near-continuous stream of concessions to Iran and its Yemeni proxy, the Houthis.

It removed the Houthis from the State Department's list of foreign terror organizations and suspended arms sales to Saudi Arabia. The administration's campaign against MBS is an obvious effort to unseat him and replace him with a less stridently anti-Iran leader. This week the administration's green-lighted South Korea's agreement to pay Iran some $7 billion in exchange for the release of a South Korean ship and its crew that Iran unlawfully seized and has held captive since early January.

Not only has Iran rejected America's gestures it has escalated its rogue behavior. Iran is expanding its regional aggression and sprinting to the nuclear finish line. In recent weeks the Iranians attacked the Israeli embassy in New Delhi. They damaged an Israeli-owned ship in the Persian Gulf. And there is growing suspicion that the massive oil spill off Israel's coast last month which caused massive ecological damage to marine life and to Israel's coastline may have been an act of environmental terrorism carried out by a Libyan ship smuggling crude oil from Iran to Syria.

Iran's Houthi proxies have expanded their missile strikes against Saudi Arabia since coming off the US. terror list. And while the US uses MBS's alleged role in killing Khashoggi to justify downgrading its relations with Saudi Arabia, the Iranians are killing scores of democracy protesters in its Baluchistan province. Whereas Khashoggi was a former Saudi intelligence officer and ally of Osama bin Laden who was working with Qatar to undermine the Saudi regime at the time he was killed; the Baluchis are innocent civilians whose sole crime is opposing the repressive regime.

As far as Iran's nuclear program is concerned, in recent days, the Iranians canceled snap inspections of their nuclear sites by UN nuclear inspectors. The International Atomic Energy Agency released a report accusing Iran of carrying out prohibited nuclear work at four undeclared nuclear sites. Khamenei has threatened to escalate Iran's uranium enrichment levels to 60%. And rather than respond by escalating sanctions against Iran, the EU – presumably with US approval – has scrapped plans to condemn Iran for its illegal behavior at the IAEA's Board of Governors' meeting this week.

In a press briefing Monday, State Department Spokesman Ned Price said, "We seek to accomplish a great deal with the Saudis: To end the war in Yemen and ease Yemen's humanitarian crisis; to use our leadership to forge ties across the region's most bitter divide, whether that's finding the way back from the brink of war with Iran into a meaningful regional dialogue or forging a historic peace with Israel."

In other words, the administration holds the Saudis solely responsible for the war in Yemen. It also blames Saudi Arabia (and presumably, Israel, the UAE and Bahrain) for being at "the brink of war with Iran," rather than blaming Iran for bringing the region to the "brink of war" through its terrorist aggression and illicit nuclear activities.

The order of Price's "to-do" list made clear that reaching "a historic peace" between Israel and Saudi Arabia is the administration's lowest priority.

Price served as National Security Council spokesman during the Obama administration. There he played a key role in marketing the JCPOA and developing what his colleague, then deputy national security adviser Ben Rhodes referred to as the information "echo chamber" for selling the deal to ignorant reporters in Washington. Last year, in a speech before the National Iranian-American Council, (a group widely viewed as the Iranian regime's unofficial lobby in Washington), Price said that a Biden administration would remove the Iranian Revolutionary Guards Corps from the State Department list of foreign terror groups.

Taken together, the administration's moves make clear that beyond paying occasional lip service to the Abraham Accords, ending the Arab and Islamic world's conflict with Israel and forging a wider peace between them is not a goal it wishes to pursue. Indeed, for Biden and his advisers, Arab-Israel peace is an impediment to their ideologically motivated efforts to empower the PLO and Iran.
