Wisconsin issues subpoenas as 'first step towards a full, cyber-forensic audit' of 2020 election

By WorldTribune

The chair of the Wisconsin Assembly's Elections Committee has issued subpoenas seeking 2020 election materials for Milwaukee and Brown counties.

State Rep. Janel Brandtjen said in a statement that she issued the subpoenas "as the first step towards a full, cyber-forensic audit of tabulators and inspection of the physical ballots from the November 2020 fall election."

The subpoenas seek a wide scope of materials, stretching from the physical ballots themselves, to tabulation equipment and "forensic images" of election equipment.

OANN's Christina Bobb reported on Friday that Brandtjen has "heard from many of her constituents and many people around Wisconsin saying that they want an audit and they want to see what's happening in their elections here in Wisconsin ... and so she issued those subpoenas, so it looks like we will see an audit. This is the same approach that Arizona took to subpoena the counties and ask them to turn over the information, and that happened this morning."

Republicans have questioned why Milwaukee officials didn't release results until the early morning after Election Day. They've also continued on page 24

Europe's 'unprecedented manmade floods'

Separating myth from reality about extreme weather events today and over the centuries

By Paul Dreissen

Deadly floods in Germany and Belgium have put climate change back in the news in time for the COP-26 climate gabfest in Glasgow. Not surprisingly, government officials again blamed fossil fuels, greenhouse gases and manmade climate change for the calamities, to deflect attention from their official incompetence – as they did with continued on page 4

WH Admits Working with Big Tech to Censor, Many Implications

Big deal? Gates-Soros group acquires for-profit Covid testing firm

By WorldTribune

George Soros and Bill Gates have joined forces to buy out the UK-based Covid-19 testing firm Mologic.

In a July 19 statement, the Soros Economic Development Fund, an arm of Soros's Open Society Foundations, confirmed that it has partnered with the Bill & Melinda Gates Foundation. The Soros–Gates collaboration is part of the Global Access Health initiative, which will invest "at least" $41.1 million in the project, according to the statement.

The First Slave Owner in Virginia was Neither Jewish nor European

By Bob Ryan

There has been a growing belief in progressive circles of the 1619 Project ilk, that all Jews are of European descent and all Europeans who came to the Americas owned African slaves.

It's not based on history. There is no basis for this belief other than a desire to believe it is true. Racial justification is based on an old hatred that alters form while remaining hatred. Jews, as historical records prove, are not of European origin, and most have no lineage in Europe, but that does not stop them from being classified as white by those who continued on page 9

Green energy deficits rely on political power plays

Steve's Say . . .

The Storm

Yesterday someone might consider a lost day. And in some ways I understand that, actually having that thought cross my mind at least twice during the day.

Like many homes in Menomonee Falls and the greater Milwaukee area, we had no power since 8 PM the previous night until the lights returned at 8:10 PM last night (August 11th), save for an unexplained 25 minute stint from 6:15 - 6:40 AM. That experience broadcasted the truth of how our modern lifestyle depends on cheap, available energy, without which we rapidly devolve into raw survivalism.

In the summer of 2021 we find ourselves in what ought to be the most unsettling of times, at least if you indoctrinate your mind with mainstream media (MSM) lies or refuse to access truth media to see what's really happening out there. For the whole world knows two important undeniable truths:

1) The Deep State created the Covid-19 "virus" and subsequent MSM propaganda hysteria for the purposes of ushering in the Great Reset, the modern day version of feudalistic slavery of bygone eras.

2) The stolen US Presidential election of 2020 Trump won in an overwhelming landslide.

The Rockefeller Foundation in conjunction with Bill Gates, Dr. Fauci and other New World Order elites conceived of the Covid-19 pandemic plan long ago, specifically to usher in "The Great Reset." World Economic Forum leader Klaus Schwab describes the plan, its goals and specific hoped for results in his recently published book of the same name. In case you were not aware, Klaus Schwab's mother's maiden name is Rothchild.

The theft of a US Presidential election indicates a well planned and choreographed scheme. It must include contingencies in case scenario projections prove to be greatly inaccurate, as occurred in 2016. This heist required democrat operatives, deep state contractors, corrupt politicians of both parties and foreign entities working together in constant communication, with the fake news media providing the barrage of false narratives and stories aimed at distracting whomever they could mesmerize.

Faux legitimacy ensued, with the media declaring the election winner a few days later, followed by compromised courts refusing to hear cases. Then when the constitutional fix which could've occurred on January 6th got usurped by the Pelosi/McConnell planned insurrection, compromised politicians, politically entrenched bureaucrats, world corporate executives and of course the fake news media combined efforts to vilify all Trump supporters. Each individual in each of these groups performed their treasonous part in this apparently successful attack on our constitutional republic.

But like everything that comes out of the fake news media, nothing is as it appears. And truth, seemingly slow to come forth, in the end always apprehends the liars. And so it will be.

Nothing said in MSM about Covid-19 has any scientific backing or even a sliver of truth. The whole story of its origin and how it developed reeked from the start, now shown to be a complete lie. The PCR test could never provide "covid case" verification as articulated by its creator before his mysterious untimely death, so all case data has no meaning. The CDC itself admitted this fact. Every university desiring to study the "Covid-19" virus cannot even get a single sample of the virus. It doesn't exist. This fact forced a judge in Alberta to dismiss a fine for not wearing a mask, acknowledging that all civil or criminal enforcement actions related to Covid-19 have no scientific basis. The covid thing is a total lie, top to bottom and side to side, including masking and the jab. And most people have figured that out.

As far as the stolen presidential election goes, it had to be this way. Yes, I do believe that Trump, the Patriots and the world alliance allowed these perpetrators to commit the entirety of their crime, confident that they could bring forth the truth in due time while simultaneously safeguarding the country from a complete and total dismantling. With the Arizona forensic audit data coming forth along with Mike Lindell's presentation of all of the data and facts he's accumulated, the complete truth about what happened in the 2020 election will be displayed for all to see in undeniable form. Then the remedy must quickly follow, for a stolen election left uncorrected must surely lead to totalitarian rule.

In order for the vast majority of American citizens to understand what's been happening to their country, the absolute evil these people wish to inflict on our population and the world, and accept the remedy to destroy their plan, they had to see it for themselves. This revelation of truth will drive people to turn to God for help and forgiveness, and create an overwhelming unity among the people of America. Without this unity, I believe the satanic criminal cabal could not be extricated from our country.

Most people must see evil in action in order to believe it, for the evil we face seems inconceivable to moral people. Just read a few paragraphs of Klaus Schwab's book "The Great Reset." His book makes "Mein Kampf" look tame. By the way, Covid stands for "certificate of vaccination ID." Vaccine passports anyone?

So follow the advice of our Lord. Be of courage, and fear not. Trust in God, trust also in our Lord Jesus Christ. For he has already overcome the world and brought forth a pathway to salvation for all who believe.

Why Blame "Climate Change" for Bad Weather and Not Credit it for Good?

Because that would defeat the whole agenda!

That's right, powerful people in governments, in the United Nations, in business, and in nongovernmental nonprofit organizations are forcing an agenda on the world, and they're using fears of "climate change" to do it.

All too many government leaders are power hungry. They want more and more control over your life. And if they can convince you that your use of energy is causing global catastrophe, you're more likely to give them that control.

Globalists—whether in the United Nations or in giant multinational businesses or nonprofits—don't like the idea of national sovereignty, which is essential to government by the consent of the governed, i.e., to liberty. So they use "climate change" as an excuse to usher in global government.

But they're deceivers. From the git-go, they're pulling the wool over your eyes. They claim that "climate change" is causing more frequent or intense extreme weather events—but the data show otherwise. They claim carbon dioxide emitted when you get your energy from coal, oil, and natural gas controls global average temperature—when in reality it plays a real but minimal role. They claim global warming will impoverish billions of people through the end of this century. But even their own preferred authority on such matters—the UN's Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change—contradicts them. It predicts that even if we did nothing at all to reduce carbon dioxide emissions, global warming would at worst reduce gross world product per capita by 2 or 3 percent by the year 2100—from a level two, three, or four times what it is today.

No doubt many of your friends and neighbors have swallowed these claims, because they don't know the facts that stand against them.

But if you read The Climate Blame Game: Are We Really Causing Extreme Weather? you'll know just how to enlighten them.

That's why I'm eager to send you a FREE copy of this clear, concise, well-documented, persuasive paper by my friend William "Matt" Briggs, a Ph.D. statistician with a Masters in atmospheric physics. Oh, and by the way, Matt's set to be my guest on Cornwall Alliance livestream Tuesday, August 20, on Facebook and YouTube, when we'll discuss this very study—and more of his work. You won't want to miss that!

I'll do that, to say "Thank you!" when you donate any amount (100% tax deductible!) to the Cornwall Alliance by the end of July and ask for it. But don't delay. When we run out, we wont' be able to send any more.

The consequences of being wrong on climate change

By Noel Funderburk

Undoubtedly Al Gore made a lot of money from writing his book on "man-made" climate change.

Many people and country leaders have jumped on that band wagon and are making great effort to reduce the amount of carbon dioxide in the atmosphere. Our government is spending large amounts of money to trap carbon dioxide and pump it far underground where it can never be recovered. But what if they are wrong? What are the consequences?

I am writing this scientific opinion piece from my viewpoint as a Ph.D. microbiologist and biochemist.

The basic principles are actually pretty simple. To understand the climate of the earth, one must understand the source of energy, which is the sun, the properties of water, and the unique place of the element carbon to living things on earth.

The sun controls the climate on earth. The sun produces an enormous amount of radiant energy which is released in all directions. The relatively tiny earth receives only a very small amount of that solar energy, yet it heats the earth in just the right amount for life to survive on earth. There can be no doubt that the temperature of the earth is determined by the energy which comes from the sun. The amount of heat striking the earth from the sun varies. When solar flares and storms are occurring, more energy is released from the sun, striking the earth. When solar activity is low, less energy is emitted. There is an approximate 11-year cycle in variation in the solar energy.

The temperature change on the surface of the earth is affected by factors in our atmosphere. We know that without a gas atmosphere to absorb the sun energy on the side of the earth turned toward the sun, temperatures would soar, and on the side away from the sun temperatures would be extremely cold. To understand how this system of temperature control works, we must know some facts about water.

Earth orbiting spacecraft are exposed to temperatures of approximately +250 F while on the sunny side of the earth, and to -250 F while in the earth's shadow. That enormous variation in temperature doesn't happen on the surface of the earth because of the temperature-buffering effect of atmospheric water vapor. Water is unique among substances. It is able to absorb more calories of heat energy with less change in temperature than anything else we know. It is water vapor in the atmosphere which moderates the daytime temperature rise by absorbing heat from the sun, and temperature drop during the night by holding that heat while not facing the sun. You can confirm this yourself by observing weather reports. When the humidity is high and the sky cloudy, there is less change in the daily high and low temperatures. When the humidity is low and the sky is clear, the high and low temperature change from day to night is much greater. In the desert southwest of the United States relative humidity readings of less than 10% are common. And with that, 40 or more Fahrenheit degree changes from morning low to afternoon high temperatures are also common. When the amount of water vapor in the air (humidity) is high, daily temperature change may be only 10 to 15 degrees F. In the overall picture of the earth's climate, carbon dioxide plays only a very small part of buffering the sun's heat energy. It provides insignificant impact compared to water vapor.

The third and very important fact to know is that all life on earth depends on carbon dioxide in the atmosphere. Carbon is a very unique element. With only small exceptions, all carbon on earth is confined to either living things, things which were once living (fossil fuels and decaying matter), or in transit from previously living to living things by way of the carbon cycle. Burning and the decaying of matter releases carbon dioxide into the atmosphere. Carbon dioxide is taken up by photosynthetic plants, algae, and phytoplankton. Oxygen is released into the atmosphere on which all animal life depends. The carbon is incorporated into proteins, starches, and lipids by the photosynthetic life. Animal life depends not only on oxygen released from photosynthetic plants on land and phytoplankton in the seas, but also on the proteins, carbohydrates, and lipids of plants as foods. When carbon dioxide is increased in the atmosphere, plant growth increases. When carbon dioxide

Calling Europe's floods "climate" is unscientific propaganda

By Craig Rucker

"When all you have is a hammer, everything looks like a nail."

To the warming-Left, every natural weather event looks like "climate."

Europe has been hit by devastating floods with the death toll reaching 188 and rising. Of course the usual suspects are exploiting this genuine, heart-rending tragedy to advance their climate agenda.

German Chancellor Angela Merkel said that Germany must "be faster in the battle against climate change."

"Belgian Prime Minister Alexander De Croo said the link with climate change was clear."

No less an expert than teenage high school dropout Greta Thunberg posted:

Deadly heatwaves, floods, storms, wildfires, droughts, crop failures... This is not "the new normal."

We're at the very beginning of a climate and ecological emergency, and extreme weather events will only become more and more frequent.

After the catastrophic recent developments - especially in Western Europe - everyone seems to be talking about the climate emergency, and rightly so. But as soon as these tragedies are over we'll most likely forget about it and move on like before. Unless we treat the crisis like a crisis all the time, we will not be able to halt the climate emergency.

All three of them, along with the rest of the politicians, media and pressure groups attributing Europe's flooding to climate are shamefully wrong.

Does anyone rationally believe that Europe's floods, or the heatwave in the western U.S. for that matter, were meaningfully worse because the temperature of the Earth warmed slightly, far less than climate models projected, almost entirely last century?

Australia's intrepid Joanne Nova did her usual no-nonsense job of showing that Europe's floods, devastating though they may be, are historically normal. In fact, in 1714 Europe flooded on Christmas Eve killing 14,000! "It's as if European history doesn't exist," she writes (posted at CFACT.org).

Every so often Europe's rivers will inevitably flood. The flooding will be worse when, as happened this time, pressure systems leave the weather lingering in place, rather than pushing the storm rapidly through. This is how Hurricane Dorian devastated the Bahamas two years ago. This type of extreme weather event cannot be prevented through taxation, redistribution, carbon trading, windmills, solar panels, or electric vehicles.

We can, however, protect people and property from extreme weather through forecasting, early warning, preparedness and response.

This is where Europe's bureaucrats devastatingly dropped the ball. This is the preventable man-made disaster.

The London Times reports that the reason for the flood's terrible loss stems from a "monumental failure of the warning system." Excerpts via the U.K.'s GWPF at Climate Depot:

The first signs of catastrophe were detected nine days ago by a satellite orbiting 500 miles above the tranquil hills around the Rhine river.

Over the next few days a team of scientists sent the German authorities a series of forecasts so accurate that they now read like a macabre prophecy: the Rhineland was about to be hit by "extreme" flooding, particularly along the Erft and Ahr rivers, and in towns such as Hagen and Altena.

Yet despite at least 24 hours' warning that predicted, almost precisely, which districts would be worst afflicted when the rains came, the flood still caught many of its victims largely unawares...

"People should have been receiving warnings; people should have understood the warnings. It's no use having massive computer models predicting what's going to happen if people don't know what to do in a flood."

Instead, the overwhelming majority of people in the path of the floods carried on with their everyday lives, oblivious to the danger, as the waters began to rise.

Western Europe had all the infrastructure it needed to protect its people. It failed to use it.

Don't let Europe's failed bureaucracy wiggle off the hook by shifting the blame to "climate."

Green Politicians stop blaming climate change for your failures

The huge floods in Europe show that the EU water drainage has fallen short in protecting citizens. Even in the South of my country (The Netherlands), with an excellent record of water management, there is a huge amount of damage. How could this happen?

"[..] European politicians state that they are not to blame for the victims and damage, but claim that the citizens and entrepreneurs, who have refused to play the green climate emergency game, are the culprits – an impudent way to disguise their own failure." – (Prof. dr. ir.) Guus Berkhout

SuperStorm Sandy and recurrent wildfires.

They're blaming the very fossil fuels that power Europe's economy; build, heat and electrify homes; and power the boats, ambulances and other equipment that were used to rescue people, recover bodies, and nurse survivors back to health.

They're the same officials who could and should have prepared their communities for floods like those that hit Germany and Europe every few decades. But failed to do so. They were warned days in advance that the rains and floods were coming – and were told almost exactly where and when the rains and floods would hit. But did nothing.

They were supposed to warn people – and get them out of harm's way. But they failed to warn their citizens that they, their homes and their children would be swept away by raging waters, if they didn't evacuate immediately.

No wonder they want to blame manmade climate change – for almost every extreme weather event. They want to avoid accountability and protect their political and financial stakes in Climate Crisis, Inc. About the last thing they want people to see are the climate realities that would confound their myths and fear-mongering, put today's extreme weather events into proper context, and keep their constituents from being bamboozled by future climate lies.

FLOODS are not uncommon, they are not unprecedented, and they are not kind to people, civilization or nature. Indeed, devastating rains and floods occur with regularity, and the more concrete, asphalt and buildings we put in cities, the less drainage we have, and the more flooding we get – in Europe, Houston, New York City and everywhere else.

The great Arno River flood of 1966 impacted much of Florence, Italy and damaged or destroyed many magnificent works of art. The 2002 Vltava River flood left high water marks 10 feet up on buildings, and 30 feet above the river's normal water line; 1784, 1845 and 1997 Czech floods were even worse.

What caused all those floods? the deadly German floods of 1790 and 1910? the Johnstown, Ohio Flood of 1889? the 1976 Big Thompson Canyon flash flood that roared down a narrow Colorado gorge, leaving residents and campers few avenues of escape? All those floods were natural, but today's are manmade?

HURRICANES are also common, recurring, devastating and deadly. It's fashionable to blame Harvey and Irma and other recent hurricanes on fossil fuels, carbon dioxide, and us humans. But it's ridiculous.

Between Hurricane Wilma in 2005 and Harvey and Irma in 2017, the United States enjoyed a 12-year major hurricane drought: 12 years without one Category 3-5 hurricane making US landfall. It was the longest period in recorded history that America was not hammered by a major hurricane.

If we're going to blame every modern era hurricane on fossil fuel emissions – shouldn't we also thank fossil fuel emissions for that unprecedented 12-year absence of truly deadly hurricanes? (It wouldn't be honest science, but it would be honest politics.) A far better approach would be to prepare better for all of Mother Nature's future onslaughts.

US property damage in raw dollars from hurricanes has certainly increased – because more people are building more expensive homes along our coasts, where hurricanes strike with regularity and intensity. But death tolls are way down, because buildings are built better, and (unlike in Germany and Belgium recently) people get warned far enough in advance to get out of harm's way.

Equally positive, global property damage

Biden's 30x30 land grab

By Craig Rucker

The people running the Biden Administration intend the federal government to own 30% of American land by 2030.

CFACT senior policy analyst Bonner Cohen explains at CFACT.org that this radical "30x30" plan would place nearly a third of America "off limits to any productive use in perpetuity... to save the planet from what the Biden White House and the ruling class assures us is a 'climate crisis,' we need to have the government gobble up more land and have it managed by bureaucrats in Washington."

In addition to land acquisition through purchase and eminent domain Green bureaucrats intend to further abuse the Endangered Species Act in ways that have nothing to do with genuinely conserving wildlife. "By adding a few more carefully selected species to the Endangered Species List," Bonner explains, "land-use restrictions can be imposed on a species' habitat that can cripple rural economies. The Biden administration is also preparing to bring back Obama's Waters of the United States (WOTUS) rule that will impose federal zoning on millions of acres of private land."

Sixty-four members of the Congressional Western Caucus co-signed a letter stating, "our lands and our waters must remain open to activities that support our rural economies and help us achieve our agriculture, timber, recreation, energy, and mineral needs."

Fifteen governors co-signed a letter to Biden stating they, "are not aware of any statutory or constitutional authority for the President, the U.S. Department of Interior, the U.S. Department of Agriculture, or any other federal agency to set aside 30 percent of all land and water in the United States... Nowhere in the laws of our nation is the authority delegated to the President or executive branch agencies to unilaterally change the policies governing land use in America."

The Biden bureaucracy is expanding government in every aspect of our lives as far and fast as it can. This is a tragic error that will have long-reaching impacts.

As President Reagan told us, "government is not the solution to our problem, government is the problem."

Green Politicians, Stop Blaming Climate Change for Your Failures.

By Guus Berkhout

The huge floods in Europe show that the EU water drainage has fallen short in protecting citizens. Even in the South of my country (The Netherlands), with an excellent record of water management, there is a huge amount of damage. How could this happen?

Citizens blamed

The situation along the coast and major rivers of my country is pretty much in order and ensured there were no casualties. However, still a lot of work need be done on the canals, tributaries and local streams. In Southeast Netherlands life is totally disrupted for some time. We already took note of this shortcoming during the major floods in the early 1990s. We also saw at that time that responsible national and local green politicians were ducking their responsibility by blaming CO2-emissions. Now, after 30 years, nothing has changed. Again, European politicians state that they are not to blame for the victims and damage, but claim that the citizens and entrepreneurs, who have refused to play the green climate emergency game, are the culprits – an impudent way to disguise their own failure.

From mitigation to adaptation

No doubt, we are in an era of global warming, as has happened already numerous times in the history of our planet. The geological record clearly shows that periods of warming and cooling have constantly alternated. But how that complex climate mechanism works, we do not yet know. In any case, the relationship between CO2-emissions and weather extremes is scientifically very unlikely.

However, if we look at the facts, we see that – in contrast to climate mitigation (less CO2) – climate adaptation (protection measures) has brought a spectacular reduction in climate casualties in recent decades. Why haven't green decision-makers learned anything from this knowledge? They are so occupied with investments in CO2-reduction that embarrassingly few resources are allocated to

Is Climate Fraud The Most Blatant Example?

By Dr. John Happs

To persuade nations to cut back on their economic growth and transfer their wealth to developing countries, the UN had to persuade politicians from developed countries that their industrial carbon dioxide emissions were causing the Earth to heat up dangerously. Guilty developed nations would then be penalised financially.

Not all politicians were fooled by the UN's claims. Canada's former Prime Minister Stephen Harper said: "Kyoto is essentially a socialist scheme to suck money out of wealth-producing nations."

Other politicians and the public remained blissfully unaware of the UN's real intentions and its use of the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change (IPCC) as its main vehicle of deception.

Politicians and the public failed to see how the pretence of reporting even-handedly on climate, using the IPCC even though a number of UN officials made no secret of the deception. The IPCC's Dr. Hans Joachim Schellnhuber made clear:

"Either the Earth System would undergo major phase transitions as a result of unchecked human pressure on nature's capacities and resources or a "Great Transformation" towards global sustainability would be initiated in due course. Neither transitions nor transformations will be manageable without novel forms of global governance and markets… "

As did Dr. Ottmar Edenhofer, co-chair of the IPCC's Working Group III, and lead author of the IPCC's Fourth Assessment Report released in 2007:

"The climate summit in Cancun —- is not a climate conference, but one of the largest economic conferences since the Second World War."

UN official, Connie Hedegaard didn't hide the fact that she cares little for what the science actually says or that action on carbon dioxide emissions would lead to more expensive electricity:

"Let's say that science, some decades from now, said 'we were wrong, it was not about climate', would it not in any case have been good to do many of the things you have to do in

It's Time to Unplug the Hype over Electric Vehicles.

By Robert Bryce

For more than a century, the promise of electric vehicles (EVs) has been parked just beyond the nearest traffic light. In 1901, the Los Angeles Times declared "The electric automobile will quickly and easily take precedence over all other" types of motor vehicles. "If the claims which Mr. Edison makes for his new battery be not overstated, there is not much doubt that it will make a fortune for somebody."

In 1911, The New York Times declared that the EV "has long been recognized as the ideal solution" because it "is cleaner and quieter" and "much more economical." And yet today, 110 years after EVs were dubbed the Next Big Thing, they account for just 2% of new car sales in the U.S.

Yes, EVs are cool. And yes, sales of Teslas and other all-electric cars are rising at a fast clip. But despite lots of government push, there still isn't enough consumer pull. Indeed, the history of the electric car is a century of failure tailgating failure.

Consider California. In 1990, state regulators mandated 10% of the cars sold in the state be zero-emission vehicles by 2003. The state now offers up to $7,000 in rebates to EV buyers. In addition, EV drivers can use California's HOV lanes even if they have only one person in their car. Despite these incentives, only about 6% of the cars in California today have an electric plug.

Federal policymakers are ignoring California's failure to jump-start widespread EV adoption. Earlier this month, the House of Representatives passed an infrastructure bill that included $36.6 billion in funding for EV charging networks and electrification of transportation.

As I explained in my June 30 testimony before the House Select Committee on the Climate Crisis, I'm pro-electricity. Over the past 16 months, I've published a book (A Question of Power: Electricity and the Wealth of Nations) and co-produced a feature-length documentary (Juice: How Electricity Explains the World) both of which spotlight the essentiality of electricity. I also launched the Power Hungry Podcast which focuses largely on electricity, nuclear energy, and the electric grid.

So yes, I am pro-electricity. But I am adamantly opposed to the notion that we should "electrify everything" including transportation. The big problems with EVs are affordability, resilience, and supply chains.

EVs are coming down in price, but they are

Is Anyone Listening?

By Bryan Preston

Depending on how and when you count, Japan's Toyota is the world's largest automaker. According to Wheels, Toyota and Volkswagen vie for the title of the world's largest, with each taking the crown from the other as the market moves. That's including Volkswagen's inherent advantage of sporting 12 brands versus Toyota's four. Audi, Lamborghini, Porsche, Bugatti, and Bentley are included in the Volkswagen brand family.

GM, America's largest automaker, is about half Toyota's size thanks to its 2009 bankruptcy and restructuring. Toyota is actually a major car manufacturer in the United States; in 2016 it made about 81% of the cars it sold in the U.S. right here in its nearly half a dozen American plants. If you're driving a Tundra, RAV4, Camry, or Corolla it was probably American-made in a red state. Toyota was among the first to introduce gas-electric hybrid cars into the market, with the Prius twenty years ago. It hasn't been afraid to change the car game.

All of this is to point out that Toyota understands both the car market and the infrastructure that supports it perhaps better than any other manufacturer on the planet. It hasn't grown its footprint through acquisitions, as Volkswagen has, and it hasn't undergone bankruptcy and bailout as GM has. Toyota has grown by building reliable cars for decades.

When Toyota offers an opinion on the car market, it's probably worth listening to. This week, Toyota reiterated an opinion it has offered before. That opinion is straightforward: The world is not yet ready to support a fully electric auto fleet.

Toyota's head of energy and environmental research Robert Wimmer testified before the Senate this week, and said: "If we are to make dramatic progress in electrification, it will require overcoming tremendous challenges, including refueling infrastructure, battery availability, consumer acceptance, and affordability."

Wimmer's remarks come on the heels of GM's announcement that it will phase out all gas internal combustion engines (ICE) by 2035. Other manufacturers, including Mini, have followed suit with similar announcements.

Tellingly, both Toyota and Honda have so far declined to make any such promises. Honda is the world's largest engine manufacturer when you take its boat, motorcycle, lawnmower, and other engines it makes outside the auto market into account. Honda competes in those markets with Briggs & Stratton and the increased electrification of lawnmowers, weed trimmers, and the like.

Wimmer noted that while manufactures have announced ambitious goals, just 2% of the world's cars are electric at this point. For price, range, infrastructure, affordability, and other reasons, buyers continue to choose ICE over electric, and that's even when electric engines are often subsidized with tax breaks to bring pricetags down.

The scale of the switch hasn't even been introduced into the conversation in any systematic way yet. According to FinancesOnline, there are 289.5 million cars just on U.S. roads as of 2021. About 98 percent of them are gas-powered.

Europe was going to flood whether you drove to work and used electricity or not. The weather warnings were clear, but not shared with the public. Tragic.

There are a few particularly onerous weasel words the global warming campaign uses when natural disaster strikes. Warming makes extreme weather "more likely" and "more severe," they say. The fact that global temperature did not make the disaster meaningfully more likely or severe they leave out entirely. This is where the media fails its responsibility and declines to ask the relevant questions.

The New York Times reports that team warming is planning to use "rapid attribution" of natural weather events to climate in an attempt to preempt those of us prepared to present the scientific and historical evidence that falsifies their claims.

That's how human behavior leads to weather that kills -- as it did in Europe.

The Science & Environmental Policy Project began in late 1990 as a research effort by atmospheric physicist S. Fred Singer and a handful of graduate students working out of a small office in downtownWashington, D.C.The Project had two goals: (1) to gather material for a book on global environmental issues,and (2) to conduct a survey of scientists affiliated with the UN Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change to determine the extent of what was, even then, being touted as scientific "consensus" on global warming.

What the graduate students discovered with their survey convinced Dr. Singer to set his book aside and instead to circulate among senior members of the American Meteorological Society a "Statement by Atmospheric Scientists" on greenhouse warming, which was quickly endorsed by 46 leading climatologists and atmospheric physicists (and eventually by nearly 100). That statement, issued on February 27, 1992, drew widespread media attention and was cited more than 150 times in the press. It was the first inkling journalists had that there was no scientific consensus on the reality of a global warming. Indeed, there was raging debate.

The Science & Environmental Policy Project was incorporated in the state of Virginia in 1992, and established as a nonprofit, 501(c)3 educational organization in late 1993.Today, having expanded from that core of 46 scientists, it draws on an international network of some of the finest minds in science who donate their time to promoting sound, credible, peer-reviewed research as the only basis for the health and environmental policies that affect us all.

You can help in two ways:

1. Download SEPP reports, press releases, and articles and pass them on – to newspaper editors, journalists, educators, civic leaders, and others. Help stop the fearmongering and the distortion of science.This is the most important thing you can do.

2. Support SEPP with your tax-deductible contributions. The environmental pressure groups, which present so much wrong information, have a combined clout of more than $1 billion a year.The Science & Environmental Policy Project has had far-reaching impact on less than one-hundredth of one percent of that figure. It's money well and effectively spent.

SCIENCE & ENVIRONMENTAL POLICY PROJECT

The Week That Was August 7, 2021

A Philosophy Or An Institution: On July 23, the Wall Street Journal published a contemplative interview of Matt Ridley by Tunku Varadarajan. It dealt with issues such as COVID, climate science, and biology, but TWTW will focus on those parts that may apply to climate science as practiced today. Ridley, an English Viscount from Northumberland (on the border with Scotland) trained as a biologist and has written books as diverse as The Red Queen: Sex and the Evolution of Human Nature; The Rational Optimist: How Prosperity Evolves; and How Innovation Works: And Why It Flourishes in Freedom.

With the Canadian molecular biologist Alina Chan, Ridley is finishing a book called "Viral: The Search for the Origin of Covid-19," scheduled to be published in November.

"As Mr. Ridley worked on the book, he says, it became 'horribly clear' that Chinese scientists are 'not free to explain and reveal everything they've been doing with bat viruses.' That information has to be 'dug out' by outsiders like him and Ms. Chan. The Chinese authorities, he says, ordered all scientists to send their results relevant to the virus for approval by the government before other scientists or international agencies could vet them:"

"'Science' has become a political catchword. 'I believe in science,' Joe Biden tweeted six days before he was elected president. 'Donald Trump doesn't. It's that simple, folks.'

"But what does it mean to believe in science? The British science writer Matt Ridley draws a pointed distinction between 'science as a philosophy' and 'science as an institution.' The former grows out of the Enlightenment, which Mr. Ridley defines as 'the primacy of rational and objective reasoning.' The latter, like all human institutions, is erratic, prone to falling well short of its stated principles. Mr. Ridley says the Covid pandemic has 'thrown into sharp relief the disconnect between science as a philosophy and science as an institution.'"

If we consider that the branch of philosophy called epistemology is the systematic study of knowledge and how it is acquired, then physical science must include physical reality. It is not the study of an imaginary world tied up in computer modeling without frequent testing against all the physical evidence available. The imaginary world appears to be the realm of the UN Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change (IPCC) and its followers. The article continues:

"In the U.K., he has also noted 'a tendency to admire authoritarian China among scientists that surprised some people.' It didn't surprise Mr. Ridley. 'I've noticed for years,' he says, 'that scientists take a somewhat top-down view of the political world, which is odd if you think about how beautifully bottom-up the evolutionary view of the natural world is.'

"He asks: 'If you think biological complexity can come about through unplanned emergence and not need an intelligent designer, then why would you think human society needs an 'intelligent government'?' Science as an institution has 'a naive belief that if only scientists were in charge, they would run the world well.' Perhaps that's what politicians mean when they declare that they 'believe in science.' As we've seen during the pandemic, science can be a source of power.

"But there's a 'tension between scientists wanting to present a unified and authoritative voice,' on the one hand, and science-as-philosophy, which is obligated to 'remain open-minded and be prepared to change its mind.' Mr. Ridley fears 'that the pandemic has, for the first time, seriously politicized epidemiology.' It's partly 'the fault of outside commentators' who hustle scientists in political directions. 'I think it's also the fault of epidemiologists themselves, deliberately publishing things that fit with their political prejudices or ignoring things that don't.'"

In shifting from the pandemic to climate science the article states:

"…. 'The modeling of where the pandemic might go,' he says, 'presents itself as an entirely apolitical project. But there have been too many cases of epidemiologists presenting models based on rather extreme assumption.'

"One motivation: Pessimism sells. 'You don't get blamed for being too pessimistic, but you do get attention. It's like climate science. Modeled forecasts of a future that is scary [sic] is much more likely to get you on television.' Mr. Ridley invokes Michael Crichton, the late science-fiction novelist, who hated the tendency to describe the outcomes of models in words that imply they are the 'results' of an experiment. That frames speculation as if it were proof.

"Climate science is already far down the road to politicization. 'Twenty or 30 years ago,' Mr. Ridley says, 'you could study how the ice ages happened and discuss competing theories without being at all political about it.' Now it's very hard to have a conversation on the subject 'without people trying to interpret it through a political lens.'

"Mr. Ridley describes himself as 'lukewarm' on climate change. He accepts that humans have made the climate warmer, but doesn't subscribe to any of the catastrophist views that call for radical changes in human behavior and consumption. His nuanced position hasn't protected him from attack, of course, and the British left is prone to vilify him as a 'denier.'

"Climate science has also been 'infected by cultural relativism and postmodernism,' Mr. Ridley says. He cites a paper that was critical of glaciology—the study of glaciers—'because it wasn't sufficiently feminist.' I wonder if he's kidding, but Google confirms he isn't. In 2016 Progress in Human Geography published 'Glaciers, gender, and science: A feminist glaciology framework for global environmental change research.'

"The politicization of science leads to a loss of confidence in science as an institution. The distrust may be justified but leaves a vacuum, often filled by a 'much more superstitious approach to knowledge.' To such superstition Mr. Ridley attributes public resistance to technologies such as genetically modified food, nuclear power—and vaccines."

After a discussion of the beginning of vaccination in England and America from practices used in Ottoman Turkey, for which early advocates were pilloried, the article concludes:

"Vaccines have been central to the question of 'misinformation' and the White House's pressure campaign against social media to censor it. Mr. Ridley worries about the opposite problem: that social media 'is complicit in enforcing conformity.' It does this 'through 'fact checking,' mob pile-ons, and direct censorship, now explicitly at the behest of the Biden administration.' He points out that Facebook and Wikipedia long banned any mention of the possibility that the virus leaked from a Wuhan laboratory.

"'Conformity,' Mr. Ridley says, 'is the enemy of scientific progress, which depends on disagreement and challenge. Science is the belief in the ignorance of experts, as [the physicist Richard] Feynman put it.' Mr. Ridley reserves his bluntest criticism for 'science as a profession,' which he says has become 'rather off-puttingly arrogant and political, permeated by motivated reasoning and confirmation bias.' Increasing numbers of scientists 'seem to fall prey to groupthink, and the process of peer-reviewing and publishing allows dogmatic gate-keeping to get in the way of new ideas and open-minded challenge.'

"The World Health Organization is a particular offender: 'We had a dozen Western scientists go to China in February and team up with a dozen Chinese scientists under the auspices of the WHO.' At a subsequent press conference they pronounced the lab-leak theory 'extremely unlikely.' The organization also ignored Taiwanese cries for help with Covid-19 in January 2020. 'The Taiwanese said, 'We're picking up signs that this is a human-to-human transmission that threatens a major epidemic. Please, will you investigate?' And the WHO basically said, 'You're from Taiwan. We're not allowed to talk to you.'"

"He notes that WHO's primary task is forestalling pandemics. Yet in 2015 it 'put out a statement saying that the greatest threat to human health in the 21st century is climate change. Now that, to me, suggests an organization not focused on the day job.'

"In Mr. Ridley's view, the scientific establishment has always had a tendency 'to turn into a church, enforcing obedience to the latest dogma and expelling heretics and blasphemers.' This tendency was previously kept in check by the fragmented nature of the scientific enterprise: Prof. A at one university built his career by saying that Prof. B's ideas somewhere else were wrong. In the age of social media, however, 'the space for heterodoxy is evaporating.' So those who believe in science as philosophy are increasingly estranged from science as an institution. It's sure to be a costly divorce."

The UN has lost its way. It has become an organization for acquiring power and world influence, while ignoring its actual purposes. The IPCC is an example. The IPCC has abandoned the scientific method in favor of

Number of the Week: Down 38%. For over a month, TWTW has followed wind power at the Bonneville Power Administration (BPA) which demonstrates that load balancing is a difficult task. An electric grid is an energized system and load balancing is needed to assure there is sufficient current to meet consumption, without overloading the system to the point of damage. With the exception of a few extreme spikes, since July 22, after days of running below 500 MW (megawatts), often near zero, on the afternoon of August 5, wind power jumped to over 2500 MW and bounced between 2500 and 1500 MW to August 7.

The great variability in wind power requires that BPA operate its dams so that hydro power varies from almost 10,000 MW to 4,000 MW placing stress on the hydro-turbines in the system.

As cited in the July 17 TWTW, in 2012 BPA realized that the hydro system was at its limits for balancing wind power. Since then, BPA has curtailed the capacity of the wind power it supports by 38%, from slightly above 4700 MW to 2930 MW. How do wind power advocates plan to balance the grid when wind power fails?

New IPCC report provides little objective basis for policymaking

By Clintel

CLINTEL has carried out a preliminary review of the IPCC Summary for Policymakers (SPM) of the AR6 WGI report (on the Physical Science) issued today. It appears that the SPM is, as in previous reports, prone to data exaggeration and so provides little objective basis for policymaking.

Surprisingly, climate scientists from IPCC-circles only last week admitted that their new AR6 generation of climate models are 'overheated' and therefore too alarmist. The admission also raises questions on the reliability of temperature forecasts of the IPCC previous generation of models in the 2014 AR5 report, which used an extremely high RCP8.5 emissions scenario, often inappropriately touted as a business-as-usual case and used to promote extreme climate action.

Independent observations had already indicated that CMIP5-models were too sensitive to greenhouse gas increases, probably by a factor of two. The combination of too high climate sensitivity and too high emissions projections resulted in implausibly high temperature forecasts. As the new generation models appear to run even warmer, they make the equivalent scenarios in AR6 erroneously high. IPCC-scientists themselves are beginning to doubt whether their models can be trusted as a policy instrument. "It's become clear over the last year or so that we can't avoid this admission", Gavin Schmidt – director of NASA's Goddard Institute for Space Studies – told the renowned journal Science. Schmidt also said: "You end up with numbers for even the near-term that are insanely scary – and wrong."

The new scenarios of up to 5°C temperature rise from 1850 by 2100 are not consistent with observed current warming of about 0.15°C per decade, implying a further rise of only 1.2°C by 2100.

The SPM graphic of global temperatures over the last 2000 years inspires little confidence in that it fails to note the Roman and Medieval Warming Periods (with temperatures similar to or higher than now) nor the Little Ice Age (with the coldest temperatures over those two millennia).

Global mean sea level projections to 2100 appear similarly exaggerated. Tide gauge data since 1900 indicates a rise of 2.1mm per year, while 27 years of satellite data indicates 3.3mm per year. Taking the higher figure implies only 25cm further rise by 2100.

The generalized SPM claims of increased frequency and intensity of extreme weather events appear inconsistent with previous IPCC reports. The basis for these claims, particularly for increased droughts, will be further assessed in our analysis of the full WGI report. Many current independent observations actually indicate greater incidence of extreme weather events in the past.

CLINTEL has consistently argued that, while the climate is changing, partly due to anthropogenic influences, there is no climate crisis, and that climate policy should be based on prudent cost-effective adaptation rather than unaffordable ineffective mitigation. The new SPM provides little objective evidence to change those strongly-held convictions.

Green Wrecking Balls

By Viv Forbes

Claiming to save the world from the global warming ghosts, climate alarmists are smashing our future with Green Wrecking Balls.

Greens say they love trees.

However, their policies destroy ridge-line forests to make room for subsidized bird-chopping wind turbines with their clear-felled spider webs of roads and transmission lines.

They also encourage fierce forest firestorms by preventing the protective patchwork of the many small fires once lit by aboriginals and pastoralists. We have a choice: many small fires or a few huge wildfires. Greens have also forced foresters out of the forests, thus removing their practical forest conservation.

Green agendas have also resulted in clearing forests to feed distant power stations with "green" wood pellets and to make room for biofuel plantations. The solar panels they subsidize are smothering grasslands and farms with landscapes of sun-stealing plastic shades (made in China). And where they use mirrors to focus solar heat, birds get roasted on the wing.

Now Even Science Demonstrates Islamic Aggression

Not content with destroying forests and farmland with the plastic, steel, and concrete clutter of the green energy twins, turbines and panels are now wearing out and loading landfills with un-degradable plastic waste. Not green at all.

Once Australia had cheap reliable electricity powered by coal and hydro, but Green Wrecking Balls are destroying coal power in favor of those unreliable and intermittent energy twins, wind and solar. This has made electricity expensive and unreliable, with zero measurable benefits for the climate.

After their destructive war on coal, the Green Wrecking Balls are now taking aim at cattle.

Green wreckers are also destroying Australia's water security and flood mitigation by opposing new dams and weirs and by wasting stored water on "environmental flows." Droughts and floods will come again.

More Green Wrecking Balls have shredded the reputations of once-trusted organizations like CSIRO, ABC, and most universities. And they green-wash our kids at every opportunity. People increasingly doubt the constant dirge of climate alarmism from these Green Cuckoos bred in their cozy taxpayer-funded nests.

Finally, Green educators have corroded standards in math, science, and engineering, replacing hard data and analysis with manipulated models and green fables.

There is a green agenda, but it's more about world government than about the environment. It is time to start wrecking the Green Wrecking Balls.

is limited in the atmosphere, plant growth is limited also. When plant growth is limited, food for humans, domestic animals, wildlife, and all life in the oceans is limited. In addition to food, plants also provide forests as shelter for animal life, timber for construction lumber, and fiber for cloth. Plants take water from the soil and evaporate it to provide temperature-regulating water vapor to the atmosphere. Plants absorb the sun's energy and use the energy for photosynthesis instead of allowing the energy to heat the soil. We must not reduce the carbon dioxide plant food.

As stewards of the earth, humans must allow and provide for the continuing cycle of carbon dioxide to allow life-giving plant growth. The consequences of reducing carbon dioxide in the atmosphere will be a world-wide disaster. When carbon dioxide is reduced, food for humans and animals will be reduced. Famines will increase. Reduced crop yields will affect the less-developed countries of the world more than those with well-developed agricultural practices. The result on societies of people in the world will be an increase in the gap between the "Haves" and the "Have Nots" and increased tension and wars. Wildlife which depend on plant food will experience failure of the earth to provide food. Fish, crustaceans, and sea mammal populations will experience food shortages and reduced populations. When carbon dioxide deficiency reduces the ability of plants to evaporate water into the atmosphere, the dry air increases the risk of raging forest fires. When atmospheric water vapor is reduced, water in the polar ice caps will sublime into atmospheric water vapor, reducing the amount of ice. All of the world will be affected.

It is crucial that the carbon dioxide levels in the atmosphere be maintained and even increased. As the world human population increases, more, not less food, shelter, and fiber will be necessary. More carbon dioxide in the atmosphere will be necessary. As we have been trapping and pumping carbon dioxide from power plants and pumping it deep underground in wells, we must find ways to recover that life-giving gas and use it to increase food for all human, land, and sea life.

"Ideas have consequences. Bad ideas have victims," says John Stonestreet.

Reducing carbon dioxide in the atmosphere is a bad idea.

from weather-related disasters, as a proportion of global gross domestic product, went down significantly since 1990, largely for the same reasons. Deaths are down too.

TORNADOES. A Washington Post chart makes it abundantly clear that violent F4 and F5 tornadoes have been less frequent the last 35 years than they were during the 35-year period 1950-1985. Even more amazing, for the first time in history, the United States was not hit by a single violent twister in 2018. Was that because of fossil fuel emissions?

Indeed, very few tornadoes compare to the horrific Gainesville, Georgia tornado of 1936, which killed 450 people – or the even more horrendous, record-setting the Tri-State Twister of 1925. That one lasted 3.5 hours, traveled 220 miles, obliterated entire towns, and killed nearly 700 people

BLIZZARDS are also common. But predictably, almost every big winter storm nowadays gets blamed on "carbon" (CO_2) emissions, and we're told to expect far more if we don't end fossil fuel use.

Climate con artists want us to forget the Nebraska School Children's Blizzard of January 1888, when a relatively warm day, with snow melting all around, suddenly became a vicious storm. In less than three hours, Midwestern temperatures plummeted from plus-35 to minus-20 and even minus-40. Winds howled down from the North, bringing several feet of heavy snow. The storm killed some 500 people across several states, most of them in Nebraska.

That blizzard made US and international news. But it was soon overshadowed by the Great Mid-Atlantic Blizzard of March 1888. That one buried New York City and much of the East Coast under mountains of snow, and killed over 400 people. Dozens of New Yorkers weren't found until days later, when their frozen remains were dug out of massive snow drifts.

TEMPERATURES. The dawn of the industrial age coincides with the end of the Little Ice Age, so the warming is mostly natural. Climate models predict much higher temperatures than we're experiencing. And average global temperatures have barely budged since 2002, except during El Niño events.

People once learned important lessons from extreme weather events. Midwesterners invested in stronger homes and schools, developed better weather forecasting, made sure they kept winter clothing with them and their kids even when the weather looked balmy, and built tornado warning systems and shelters. New York City built a subway system, enabling people to travel underground, safe from deadly cold and snow.

Today, too many government officials prefer to collude with activists, subsidy-seekers and media sidekicks to blame "manmade climate change" for every disaster. They ignore their own roles in the property damage and death from natural disasters like SuperStorm Sandy. They pretend they can control the climate and weather – while getting richer and more powerful embracing anti-fossil fuel policies.

After countless millennia of natural disasters, we're supposed to believe extreme weather events are now manmade, and temperature changes, droughts and storms are now our fault. At humanity's most technologically advanced level in history, we're supposed to be unable to cope with, adapt to or recover from climate and weather events.

We cannot afford to be bamboozled by climate con artists – who for their own selfish reasons claim we must immediately get rid of the fossil fuels that provide 80% of America's and the world's energy ... and then magically replace those fuels with expensive, intermittent, weather-dependent, land-intensive and raw materials-hungry wind, solar and battery power.

If we let ourselves get deluded, electricity prices will skyrocket, blackouts will become commonplace, our jobs will disappear, our living standards will plummet, our lives will be at greater risk, our environment will be destroyed – and we'll deserve what we get. It's time to fully and honestly reassess "the science" behind this supposed "climate crisis."

The Infrastructure Plan That Wasn't

By Gary Wickert

Rush Limbaugh was notorious for saying that, "Words mean something." But who better than liberal politicians to pollute just about everything in our culture, including the meaning of words. Even the words "man" and "woman" seemingly no longer mean what they mean if you are listening to just about any Democrat in the age of a Democratic Party hijacked by the far, radical left. But in particular, the "American Jobs Plan"—Biden's $2.3 trillion behemeth bill which does just about everything except repair and build infrastructure and contribute toward the creation of new jobs—is about as speciously-named since the "Affordable Care Act." It's the legislative equivalent of a blatant lie.

The "American Jobs Plan" is the second installment of a Monopoly money plank through which his handlers purport to implement their radical agenda. It is itself speciously named "Build Back Better." Clearly, somebody in the Biden Administration is obsessed with alliteration. But more dangerous, also obsessed with lying to the American people. The first installment of this agenda, the $1.9 trillion "American Rescue Plan" (aka "COVID Relief Bill"), passed in March and borrowed from future generations in order to send $1,400 checks to millions of Americans and $440 billion to state and local governments… especially those already in financial trouble due to government employee union pension underfunding. It contained a job-killing minimum wage hike.

The American Jobs Plan does just about everything but repair and upgrade America's infrastructure. Dictionary.com defines "infrastructure" as "the basic physical and organizational structures and facilities (e.g. buildings, roads, power supplies) needed for the operation of a society or enterprise." The $2.3 trillion spending package allocates huge sums of money to the most radical of left-wing agendas, including the following:

- Supporting unions
- Job-killing minimum wage hike
- Affordable housing in "underserved" areas
- "Community investment" in vulnerable communities
- ob creation in clean energy sector
- Job training for formerly incarcerated individuals
- Building new public schools
- Upgrade child care facilities
- A new office at the Commerce Department
- Community college infrastructures
- Modernizing the Veteran's Administration
- Expands tax credits to incentivize child care centers

The so-called Jobs Plan amounts to no more than a massive federal power grab and does injustice to the English language by using the word "infrastructure." Global warming conspiracists are giddy over the bill because it makes a huge investment in climate change-related priorities. Spending on the mythical anthropogenic global warming problem is roughly ten times greater than it was in Barack Obama's American Recovery and Reinvestment Act of 2009. The plan bundles climate change wish list items with other economic and social investment measures which have nothing at all to do with U.S. infrastructure.

The justification for addressing climate change in an infrastructure bill is that "climate change is accelerating deterioration as extreme weather batters infrastructure." You can't make this stuff up. That is exactly what the liberal Center for Strategic & International Studies (CSIS)—another misuse of the English language—has said about it. It throws $85 billion at public transit and $80 billion for the money-losing Amtrak, because "the lifecycle greenhouse gas emissions of public transit is consistently lower than those of cars." It throws $174 billion at electric vehicles; again, nothing at all to do with infrastructure.

The plan also blatantly says that power and social inequality have been playing a role in shaping "human infrastructure" (I didn't make that up), so it targets "climate investments" at "disadvantaged communities." Yeah, that's exactly what those communities are holding their breath for; climate change fixes. The CSIS claims that an additional $12 billion is tossed to workers "penalized by structural racism and economic inequities, especially people of color, women, and formerly incarcerated individuals." So much for infrastructure.

Joe Biden's White House spokesperson Karine Jean-Pierre told a fawning media last month that the first week in June was "Infrastructure Week" and was "incredibly critical" to getting the infrastructure package together. Of course, the deadline for the deal—reminiscent of Obama's "red line" in Syria over the use of chemical weapons—came and went in May. But we have forgetful media. In fact, the Biden Administration's entire concept of "Infrastructure Week" has become a sad metaphor for this administration's inability to accomplish anything other than cause damage to the American economy. The Green New Deal or the latest strafing attack of socialism have been disguised as something intended to repair roads and bridges. But nobody—and I mean nobody—could be so ignorant as to really think that the Infrastructure Bill had anything to actually do with infrastructure.

President Biden has referred to his new "Jobs Plan" as a "once-in-a-generation investment." He lied and said that it would be responsible for the creation of 19 million new jobs. How do we know? Because Biden later changed his tune and said it would only create 2.7 million jobs. Instead, the American Jobs Plan is nothing more than a potpourri of radical, left-wing wish list items which will mortgage the future of our children and grandchildren, while doing very little to actually repair America's infrastructure.

38 Wisconsin Parent Groups Reject Lockdowns and Forced Masking in Open Letter to President Biden and WI Governor Evers

WISCONSIN - 38 parent advocacy groups across the state of Wisconsin have rejected local and national calls for new lockdowns and enforced masking of their children in an open letter to President Joe Biden and Governor Tony Evers.

The full text of the letter is below.

President Biden and Governor Evers,

We represent over 20,000 Wisconsin families across 38 parent advocacy groups, and we are here to inform you that your uninvited reign of destruction over the children of Wisconsin is finished.

We have watched the last week unfold in abject horror - observing our government institutions and leaders failing our children at every turn, again. Your renewed calls for lockdowns, enforced mask mandates, and masking in schools is not rooted in science and is objectively cruel to the most vulnerable in our society, our children. We believe that you are in fact aware of this and continue to play political games with our children, despite our efforts to work with you over the last twelve months.

We are here to inform you that this ends today.

Effective immediately we will not:

1. Mask our children in schools

2. Allow you to use your private sector counterparts to enforce invasive mask mandates on our children in various stores or at community activities

3. Subject our children to any further local, regional, or national lockdowns or movement restriction

Simply put, these are not your children. They are ours and they too, are Americans with rights. They are our responsibility and our most beloved. They are not yours.

We applaud and support the school boards, businesses, and localities that have respected our parental choice. We anticipate and appreciate their continued support of our right to choose what is best for our children and individual families.

If you are a parent reading this, hear us clearly: you are not alone. We urge you to connect with other parents and make your voice heard.

We are strong. We are united. We are in control.

We have never and will never co-parent with the government.

Respectfully,

Wisconsin Can Fund Students, Not Systems

The News: For too long, the value of Wisconsin students have been determined by a complex school funding formula that filters money to buildings and systems. Students are simply worth more, or less, depending on where they happen to live or what type of school they attend. This needs to change. The Wisconsin Institute for Law & Liberty (WILL) published a new report, Fund Every Kid: Reforming Wisconsin's School Funding Formula, that provides an overview of the current school finance system and proposes the adoption of a dynamic student-centered funding system.

The Quote: WILL Research Director, Will Flanders, said, "The future of education in Wisconsin cannot be financed by the formula of the past. The current school finance system stands as a barrier to the next innovative and exciting reforms that prioritize students and families over buildings and systems. We need change now."

Fund Every Kid: Reforming Wisconsin's School Funding Formula

July 20, 2021 | Will Flanders

The current funding formula in Wisconsin is characterized by inequality across sectors and districts, with the value of a student changing depending on where they go to school. We propose a reform to the funding system that will create equitable funding no matter which school door a child walks into, and will begin the conversation about more fundamental reform to the system.

The Problem: The current school funding formula is a complex combination of state, local and federal aid. Funding in districts is largely based on antiquated revenue limits that have cemented in place funding gaps for 25 years. Students are worth more, or less, depending on where they happen to live, or whether they attend a choice or charter school. Even worse, the current funding system utilizes a three-year rolling average of enrollment that allows districts to receive funding for students they no longer educate. This current model is a barrier to reform.

Weighted Student Funding: Wisconsin can fund students, not just buildings and systems. A system of weighted student funding would provide the same level of funding for each student regardless of school sector, or home district. Students would receive extra revenue based on characteristics like poverty, disabilities, and English language learners, but otherwise would be valued the same.

The advantage of this system would be to create a dynamic student-centered funding system that allows for the expansion of new and innovate education models. We can get more money flowing into the classroom and not get bogged down in administrative costs. Finally, weighted student funding would unshackle students and schools from an opaque and complex formula that relies too heavily on the property wealth or poverty of a given community.

Why Now? Wisconsin was once on the leading edge of education reform. Today, we're being left behind. More and more states are implementing new and innovative education reforms like Education Savings Accounts (ESAs) and tax credit scholarships. But Wisconsin's current school finance model stands in the way of adopting similar programs. Reforming school finance is a critical first step towards a brighter education future in Wisconsin.

are inclined to base things on race.

So let's look at some authentic New World history to set the record straight.

In 1619, shortly after the first laws were passed by representative government in Virginia, the English privateer ship, The White Lion, arrived in Virginia with what was noted as 'twenty and some odd Angolans.' The number is believed to be closer to thirty. They had been taken from a Portuguese ship that had intended to take them to Mexico to be sold as slaves.

Upon arriving in Virginia, the Angolans were traded for supplies and became indentured servants. They became this, along with many whites in the colony, as there was no law allowing for slavery. Indentured servitude was the standard for the British, which was harsh and resulted in shortened life spans. Most, regardless of origin, did not survive their contracts, but none were held beyond what the contract allowed without violation of the law.

The Supreme Court has Become a Council of Kings

One of the Angolans was a man named John Gaeween, who changed his name to Gowen. He was the first to be free of the contract since he saved up the money he needed to pay for his freedom.

Following his freedom, he married Margaret Cornish, who was born somewhere in England, but the exact location is not known. What is known is that she was a white woman who violated no law and did not marry in secret. Leftist revisionist historians of today have claimed that the colonists' had an obsession with race. But there are no historical facts to support it since there were no laws based on race.

The Angolan-born John Gowen arrived at a time when no one cared about race in Virginia. Mixed marriages and children had already been happening with the local tribes with no negative societal impact of any kind. The only thing the Virginians cared about was whether a person was Christian.

John Gowan's occupation, according to geni.com, an invaluable resource for those interested in genealogy, was, "a magistrate, auditing and ruling over smaller filings. In York County, in his later years, John judged Europeans and Africans alike until his death." In other words, he was a judge who ruled over people equally under the law.

Anthony Johnson, another Angolan-born indentured servant, was brought to Virginia two years after John Gowan and served out the entirety of his contract before becoming a successful and wealthy farmer. Being born in Angola had no bearing on the achievements that would come later in his life.

As the owner of a farm, he had indentured servants work the crops. Among those indentured servants was the African-born, (country of origin unknown), John Casor. After the expiration of the contract, Johnson refused to give Casor his earned freedom.

The case was taken to court and initially ruled in favor of Casor. Casor indentured himself to another farmer and the entire matter should have been settled. The same judge, a year later in 1655, reversed his own ruling to enable Johnson to become the owner of Casor for life without a single law to support the ruling. Slavery had not been added into the laws of Virginia and Casor more than fulfilled his contract.

It was not until 1662 that a law was passed to enslave people based on the status of their mothers, over four decades after the first Africans arrived in Virginia.

WHEREAS some doubts have arrisen whether children got by any Englishman upon a negro woman should be slave or ffree, Be it therefore enacted and declared by this present grand assembly, that all children borne in this country shalbe held bond or free only according to the condition of the mother, And that if any christian shall committ ffornication with a negro man or woman, hee or shee so offending shall pay double the ffines imposed by the former act.

With genetic lineage the basis, slavery soon became racial, and eventually led to eugenics.

Eugenics fell out of fashion following the end of WWII, but never fully let go. Today, rather than have the white race superior to all, which was the belief of the eugenicists of the past, eugenicists today put other races on the top and it is white people who sit at the bottom with the Jews included, in part, through the erroneous belief that all Jews are of European descent.

Now history has been bastardized with critical race theory, and with it comes an attempt to return to eugenics by another name. Eugenics brought about the rebirth of the Klan in the United States before reaching its full ugliness in Germany. There were increased attacks on Jews and blacks in the United States as institutions, such as segregation, were put into place.

This current round of eugenics is in some ways worse than the original that swept through Europe and the United States. People are branded racists from birth in the new incarnation, with no redemption possible. Those who push the CRT narrative, complete with distorted history and happen to be white, are effectively saying that they are racists with the expectation that everyone is just as racist as they are. It's nonsense. Children are not born racist, and those who become racists learn it over time.

History should be taught as it happened, not as it was perceived to be. The United States is new enough to have many documents still intact from the colonial days. We know when the laws were written which legalized slavery and textbooks should reflect the facts of who the colonialists were from the first generation on to show the changing attitudes that did come to impact every colony.

John Gowen lived a remarkable life in Virginia. His story is being ignored amounts to a sorry erasure of what he did. His accomplishments, including that of becoming a judge, show just how truly little the first settlers cared about race and how much they valued the equality of the law. It also shows just how wrong the current crop of CRT enthusiasts has become.

The case of John Casor is truly egregious. To claim slavery started in 1619 is to take away his story, which should be known. For the first time in the colonies, a man was enslaved without violating a single law. His name should be known, and his story taught in every school in the United States.

Bob Ryan is the pen name of a write who has an MBA and is a science fiction writer. He has been a weekly blogger at the Times of Israel since 2019. He is an American Christian Zionist who staunchly supports Israel's right to exist as a Jewish state.

WILL to ACLU of Wisconsin: Schools Not Required to Teach Critical Race Theory

WISCONSIN INSTITUTE FOR LAW & LIBERTY

The News: Wisconsin Institute for Law & Liberty (WILL) President and General Counsel, Rick Esenberg, issued an open letter in response to the American Civil Liberties Union (ACLU) of Wisconsin after the organization recently warned Wisconsin school districts that they cannot restrict the teaching of concepts like Critical Race Theory (CRT). Esenberg's letter explains why the ACLU is not only wrong in its interpretation of state law but explains exactly why the advocacy of Critical Race Theory concepts and ideologies in K-12 education can and should be restricted if they create a hostile environment based on race.

Critical Race Theory: Esenberg's letter defines Critical Race Theory as "a focus on racial essentialism (the idea that persons are substantially defined by their race), an exaggerated standpoint epistemology (the idea that one's perspective is substantially formed by his or her race), an emphasis on something called white privilege (the idea that all white persons benefit from a generally undefined "systemic racism") and the assumption of black oppression (the contention that all black persons are substantially burdened by this systemic racism). They often include concepts of collective guilt or responsibility on the one hand and collective victimhood and entitlement on the other. They are generally combined with a series of contested claims about American history."

WILL's Letter: The open letter to Wisconsin school boards, administrators, and concerned parents reads in part:

Whether or not one agrees with them, "Critical Race Theory" and related concepts at issue here, as a legal matter, are not equivalent to or even necessary for an "understanding of human relations, particularly with regard to American Indians, Black Americans and Hispanics." (Wis. Stat. § 118.01(2)(c)(8)) It is not equivalent to or necessary for "teaching about 'racial issues.'" Nor is it equivalent to or necessary for "reflecting the cultural or pluralistic nature of American society." (Wis. Stat. § 121.02(1)(h)) To the contrary, these concepts are a particular political and ideological view of these matters. Nothing in state law compels that they be taught and there is no evidence that they enhance student performance. (Indeed, to the extent that they mischaracterize certain values and attributes as "white," they harm student performance.) To the extent that the ACLU letter implies otherwise, it is bad and unsupported legal "advice."

One final matter. The ACLU letter observes that school districts are prohibited from creating a racially hostile climate. That's true. But, to the extent that the letter implies that teaching these concepts derived from Critical Race Theory or similar ideologies is necessary to avoid such an environment or that restricting them creates one, the ACLU letter is not only wrong, it is dangerously wrong. It is dangerously wrong because it gets the matter exactly backward. While not all "CRT-based" training necessarily creates a hostile environment, much of it does. This is particularly so when a school advocates for, presents as "truth" or requires students to affirm the concepts outlined above. Teaching children that they are complicit in "systems of oppression" or have certain qualities or faults based on their color of their skin can create a hostile environment, as can pedagogical techniques that require students to act on or affirm these contentions. Lawsuits have begun. See, e.g., Deemar v. Board of Education of Evanston/Skokie, 1:21-cv-3466 (N.D. Ill. June 29, 2021). They will continue as long as such pedagogical practices continue to be used.

School districts should teach all of American history and they can certainly teach about race. But they need not teach a highly politicized and contested view of that history and of race. And they may not create a hostile environment based on race – even in the guise of a misguided (and misnamed) "anti-racism."

GOVERNMENT CIRCUS

relationship might be, the key fact is whatever information is allowed into the public square depends on Big Tech's willingness to allow the "information" into the public square.

A little of the history on this matter before discussing how the Biden administration has opened itself up to significant discovery (written and oral questions under oath) in civil litigation.

On April 15, 2021, this blog was one of the first to post an article on Big Tech as State Actor Having Constitutional Obligations to those whose speech in the public square it denies. At that time, the article had a theoretical evidentiary link based on second-hand media reports. It was part of three articles on breaking up Big Tech without new laws. A second article discussed the fact Congress does not have the constitutional authority to delegate to Big Tech the power to regulate other private parties. The third article discussed how citizens can break up big tech using the techniques of the Left.

Notwithstanding Biden's broad-ranging Executive Order to twelve agencies to ensure competition in the tech market, it is highly unlikely the Biden administration will seriously take on Big Tech, with new legislation, new regulations, or challenge it in the courts. Big Tech companies are the friends, donors, protectors, and the sycophant speech censor for the Biden administration.

Notwithstanding the rhetoric, if the Biden administration wanted to break up Big Tech, is could bring an antitrust action today. It has not. If Biden wanted to subject Big Tech to lawsuits, Biden could ask Congress to repeal section 230 of the Communications Decency Act that provides Big Tech with immunity from suit. Biden would likely have Republican support but he has not asked Congress for help. Or, Biden could direct the FCC to narrow section 230 immunity through rulemaking by limiting the section to child pornography. He has not directed it. So, more talk, talk and talk from a politician.

To take on Big Tech, other ways must be explored.

The most likely way to take on Big Tech/White House censorship will be in Former President Trump's class-action lawsuit against Big Tech. Trump claims the Big Tech's close cooperation with the government makes it a state actor. The Biden administration could also join the lawsuit if it truly believes what it claims. It has not.

Trump's lawsuit has relied on much the same public information as my April article, which is not sufficient evidence for a court of law.

All changed with Jen Psaki's (White House Press Secretary) admission, at a press conference on July 15, 2021, that the Biden administration is in regular conversation with Big Tech on censoring "misinformation." Since the press conference, social media has exploded with commentary on the issue. More commentary is not needed. Psaki's actual words are what people need to read to appreciate how she opens up many lines of discovery in Trump's civil lawsuit.

A complete transcript of Psaki's comments on "misinformation" opens the White House to civil discovery procedures.

[The content in brackets in the brackets after Psaki's statements identifies the information that could be obtained through civil discovery.]

"Alex: (16:19)

Thanks, Jen. Can you talk a little bit more about this request for tech companies to be more aggressive in policing misinformation. Has the administration been in touch with any of these companies and are there any actions that the federal government can take to ensure their cooperation? Because we've seen from the start, there's not a lot of action on some of these platforms.

Jen Psaki: (16:38)

Sure. Well, first we are in regular touch with these social media platforms and those engagements typically happen through members of our senior staff, but also members of our COVID-19 team. Given as Dr. Murthy conveyed, this is a big issue of misinformation, specifically on the pandemic.

[Possible Civil Discovery: Identification of all participants in the conversation, the substance of each conversation, documents identifying specific disinformation and the basis for determining disinformation.]

Jen Psaki: (16:57)

In terms of actions, Alex, that we have taken, or we're working to take, I should say, from the federal government, we've increased disinformation research and tracking within the Surgeon General's office. We're flagging problematic posts for Facebook that spread disinformation. We're working with doctors and medical professionals to connected medical experts who are popular with their audiences with accurate information and boost trusted content. So we're helping get trusted content out there.

[Possible Civil Discovery: Identification of all disinformation being conducted and tracked by the Surgeon General's office, all post flagged for Facebook, the identity of all "trusted" doctors and professionals who will do the outreach.]

[Psaki discusses other issues not relevant to Covid – 19 "misinformation.]

Jen Psaki: (17:27)

We also created the COVID Community Court to get factual information into the hands of local messengers. And we're also investing, as you'll have seen, in the President's, the Vice President's, and Dr. Fauci's time in meeting with influencers who also have large reaches to a lot of these target audiences who can spread and share accurate information. You saw an example of that yesterday. I believe that the video will be out for tomorrow. I think that was your question, Steve, yesterday, full follow-up there.

[Possible Civil Discovery: Identification of all local messengers and influencers who share the administration's version of the facts. Discovery would also include the soon-to-be-released video, who made it, what information was relied on in making it, and What is the COCID-19 court, what will it do and who is on it?]

Jen Psaki: (17:56)

There are also proposed changes that we have made to social media platforms, including Facebook. And those specifically are four key steps. One, that they measure and publicly share the impact of misinformation on their platform. Facebook should provide, publicly and transparently, data on the reach of Covid - 19 vaccine misinformation. Not just engagement, but the reach of the misinformation, and the audience that it's reaching. That will help us ensure we're getting accurate information to people. This should be provided not just to researchers, but to the public so that the public knows and understands what is accurate and inaccurate.

[Possible Civil Discovery: Identification of how the government believes Facebook should measure misinformation and the reach of such misinformation? How the government believes Facebook should inform the public of what is the specific misinformation. Additionally, identification of the target audiences and the "accurate" information government wants to reach the public?]

Jen Psaki: (18:32)

Second, that we have proposed that they create a robust enforcement strategy that bridges their properties and provides transparency about the rules. So I think this was a question asked before. There are about 12 people who are producing 65% of anti-vaccine misinformation on social media platforms. All of them remain active on Facebook, despite some even being banned on other platforms, including ones that Facebook owns.

[Possible Civil Discovery: Identification of what the administration considers an appropriate, robust, enforcement strategy Facebook should undertake? Also, what is the identity of the 12 people producing 65% of anti-vaccine misinformation and the specific misinformation?]

Jen Psaki: (18:58)

Third, it's important to take faster action against harmful posts. As you all know, information travels quite quickly on social media platforms. Sometimes it's not accurate, and Facebook needs to move more quickly to remove harmful violative posts. Posts that will be within their policies for removal often remain up for days. That's too long. The information spreads too quickly.

[Possible Civil Discovery: Identification of the administration's discussion of what does it want Facebook to do "more quickly?" Additionally, what does the White House consider a quick removal, and how does it determine what "misinformation" should be removed?]

Jen Psaki: (19:19)

Finally, we have proposed they promote quality information sources in their feed algorithm. Facebook has repeatedly shown that they have the leverage to promote quality information. We've seen them effectively do this in their algorithm over low-quality information. And they've chosen not to use it in this case, and that's certainly an area that would have an impact. So these are certainly the proposals. We engage with them regularly, and they certainly understand what our asks are.

[Possible Civil Discovery: What proposal has the administration made to Facebook on promoting quality information on their algorithms? What does the administration determine quality information? Is the White House following the guidelines in the Information Quality Act to determine "quality information?" Identify each time the administration has engaged with Facebook or any other Big Tech company on this issue?

[The Information Quality Act requires Federal agencies to comply with data quality guidelines to ensure and maximize the quality, utility, objectivity, and integrity of the information disseminated by the Federal government.]

Alex: (19:45)

One of the problems with vaccines right now is that they become politicized. The White House has obviously made the calculation that it's important to be more aggressive in confronting this information, but is there at all concern that that could backfire and further contribute to politicization? And is there anything that you can do to prevent that at this point?

Jen Psaki: (20:02)

America's founding documents. Those articles point out the many avenues of attack on America and Christianity, the asymmetric warfare being waged. This article will be about one man's part in the guerrilla war; actually, just a review of his article on what must be done – under the guise of preventing future wars. And, in his words, "The responsibility for charting the necessary changes in human behavior rests clearly o the sciences working in that field. Psychologists, psychiatrists, sociologist, economists and politicians…"

In 1946, by Brock Chisholm, first Director-General of the World Health Organization (WHO) and first head of the World Federation of Mental Health, wrote "The Reestablishment of Peacetime Society" for Psychiatry Journal. His own words are going to show you what they plan to achieve.

Think about this. Those in social sciences are the arbiters, the people he would have in charge of our education system, of our children's learning. Before going on, keep in mind that our country was built on the principles of natural law, on foundations of morality. Those basic principles are anathema to what Chisholm, John Dewey, Rockefeller, et.al, are indoctrinating our children to believe, and against everything that made America the greatest, freest country the world had ever seen or would see again. The country every thinking person wants to come to.

After listing reasons for war – prejudice, isolationism, the ability emotionally an uncritically to believe unreasonable things, excessive desire for material or power, fear, etc., Chisholm describes those as "well known and recognized neurotic symptoms. . .. Even self defence (sic) may involve a neurotic reaction". He is bringing every action into the world of mind control.

So, what does he see as the three necessary requirements for achieving world peace?

First, "security, elimination of the occasion for valid fear of aggression."

Second, "opportunity to live reasonably comfortably for all the people in the world on economic levels which do not vary too widely either geographically or by groups within a population. This is a simple matter of redistribution of material . . . (emphasis mine, but his words)."

"It is probable that these first two requirements would make wars unnecessary for mature normal people without neurotic necessities, but their attainment depends on the ability of enough people in the right places to want to implement them, and few people are mature and without neurotic necessities. So far in the history of the world there have never been enough mature people in the right places. (emphasis mine)."

Ah, I guess he would really have a field day with the minds of our Founding Fathers. I cannot image many people who would measure up in maturity (even at some of the very young ages those men were), and if they were neurotic, what can be said about people who don't even know what gender they are?

Third, "It follows inevitably then that the third requirement, on which the attainment and the effectiveness of the others depend, is that there should be enough people . . . without these neurotic necessities. We have never had enough people anywhere who are sufficiently free of these . . . symptoms which make wars inevitable.

"All psychiatrists know where these symptoms come from. The burden of inferiority, guilt, and fear we have all carried lies at the root of this failure to mature successful."

Hmmm. Inferiority. Guilt. Fear. In my humble opinion that describes snowflakes, people wanting to change their sex, those tearing down statues because of the greatness they represent. Let's continue.

So, what is it that needs to be changed in us folks?

"For a cause we must seek some consistent thread running through the weave of all civilizations we have known and preventing the development of all or almost all the people to a state of true maturity. What basic psychological distortion can be found in every civilization of which we know anything? It must be a force which discourages the ability to see and acknowledge patent facts, which prevents the rational use of intelligence, which teachers are encourages the ability to dissociate and to believe contrary to and in spite of clear evidence, which produces inferiority, guilt and fear, which makes controlling other people's personal behavior emotionally necessary, encourages prejudice and the inability to see, understand, and sympathize with other people's points of view. Is there any force? So potent and so pervasive. That it can do all these things. In all civilizations? There is — just one. The only lowest common denominator of all civilizations, and the only psychological force capable of producing these perversions is morality, the concept of right and wrong, the poison long ago described and warned against as 'the fruit of the tree of the Knowledge of Good and evil'.

He is saying Christianity is the cause of "our inability to attain maturity", yet those who exhibit immaturity are the Antifa and BLM grown-brats who want to destroy everything that shows they how immature, useless, and incompetent are the progeny of Chisholm's supporters.

Now he is telling us that moral relativism is the only "way to go". This next paragraph should turn everyone everywhere off psychiatry. Good and evil are the bugaboos of the new Left. There is no good or evil for them – only Us and Them, and we "Thems" are the problem.

"We have been very slow to rediscover this truth and to recognize the unnecessary and artificially imposed inferiority, guilt and fear, commonly known as sin, under which we have almost all labored, and which produces so much of the social maladjustment and unhappiness in the world. For many generations we have bowed our next to the yoke of the conviction of sin. We have swallowed all manner of poisonous certainties, fed us by our parents, our Sunday and day school teachers, our politicians, our priests, our newspapers and others with a vested interest in controlling us. . . . Good and evil. With which to keep children under control, with which to prevent freethinking, with which to impose local and familial and national loyalties and with which to bind blind children to their glorious intellectual heritage. Misguided by authoritarian dogma, Bound by the exclusive faith, stunted by inculcated loyalty, torn by frantic heresy, bedeviled by insistent schism, drugged by ecstatic experience, confused by conflicting certainty, bewildered by invented mystery, and loaded down by the weight of guilt and fear engendered by its own original promises, The unfortunate human race, deprived by these incubi of its only defenses, and it's only reasons for striving, its reasoning, power, and its natural capacity to enjoy the satisfaction of its natural urges, struggles along under its ghastly self-imposed burden. The results, the inevitable results, or frustration, inferiority, neurosis, and inability to enjoy living, to reason clearly or make a world to fit to live in."

After suggesting that psychiatrists should be training the world on how to raise "mature" people so that they, the psychiatrists won't have to undo all the neurotics moral absolutism breeds, he goes on explain what is truly wrong in our civilization:

"The reinterpretation and eventually eradication of the concept of right and wrong, which has been the basis of child training, the substitution of intelligent and rational thinking for faith in the certainties of the old people, these are the belated objectives of practically all effective psychotherapy. Would they not be legitimate objectives of original education, would it not be sensible to stop imposing our local prejudices and faiths on children and give them all sides of every question so the in their own good time? They may have the ability to size things up and make their own decisions."

They may, but, if they have been raised without boundaries, without moral guidance, with no moral compass, it is highly unlikely. Yet, that is exactly his prescription for the education of our children from kindergarten! To have them believing that they, and all humans, are the lowest life form, thus the most dispensible. We are watching the products of these principles today; the actions of those who have never been told "NO", that have been given everything imaginationable, those that, literally, have no concept of right and wrong – just the concepts of "I want" and "I want to destroy that which makes me feel inferior, immature, afraid".

"The suggestion that we should stop teaching our children moralities and rights and wrongs and instead protect their original intellectual integrity has, of course, to be met by an outcry of heretic or iconoclast, such as Was raised against Galileo for finding another planet. And against those who claimed the world was round. . ."

Now, here is his clincher:

"The pretense is made, as it has been made in relation to the finding of any extension of truth, that to do away with right and wrong would produce uncivilized people, immorality, lawlessness and social chaos. The fact is that most psychiatrists and psychologists and many other respectable people have escaped from these moral chains and are able to observe and think freely. . . Freedom. From moralities means freedom to observe, to think and behave sensibly, to the advantage of the person. And of the group, free from outmoded types of loyalties and from the magic fears of our ancestors.

"If the race is to be freed from its crippling burden of good and evil, it must be psychiatrist to take the original responsibility. This is a challenge which must be met. . .. There is something to be said for gently putting aside the mistaken old ways of our elders if that is possible. If it cannot be done gently, it may have to be done roughly or even violently." Straight out of cultural Marxism.

Perhaps those burning building, attacking those with different values, are the progeny Chisholm and his acolytes were nurturing developing. And those are probably exactly the beings he and his ilk were hoping to produce. I cannot believe that anyone with a functioning mind would want to live in a world without rules, without moral values. Yet we are watching the development of that world right now. And it is being done deliberately!

Back to Chisholm:

"Can such a program of reeducation be charted?"

Chisholm, expecting to have 15-20 years to "fix" our children and ". . . To root out. And destroy the oldest and most flourishing parasitical growth. In the world, the tree of knowledge of good and evil, so that man may learn to preserve his most precious heritage, his innocence and intellectual freedom. . .."

How does he hope to do this? Through our teachers. "It is not a job for economic or emotional misfits, for frightened, inferiority-ridden men and women. . .. Fortunately, there are recent signs (John Dewey and the Frankfurt School?) to give hope. . .. Because these are psychological matters, psychiatrists simply have to take the responsibility of interpretation and initiative."

Chisholm concludes that that all the human sciences must take control to save the human race. "No one else can. All this is the prime responsibility of psychiatry."

When he was setting up the WHO, Chisholm told his staff that "The world is sick, and the ills from which it was suffering were mainly due to the perversions of man . . . his inability to live at peace with himself."[1]

Chisholm would have us believe we are

With death of Tanzania's conservative president, China set to gain strategic port

By WorldTribune

Four months after the death of conservative President John Magufuli, Tanzania is moving to revive a project that will give communist China strategic port access to the African nation.

After speaking by phone with Chinese supreme leader Xi Jinping on July 17, Tanzania's new president, Samia Suluhu Hassan, confirmed negotiations had begun on reviving the Bagamoyo Port project that Magufuli had stalled.

Magufui had called the project "exploitative and awkward."

While Chinese propaganda outlet Xinhua proclaimed the project is aimed at boosting the local Tanzanian economy, analysts say Beijing will likely use the port for military purposes to project power in the western and southern Indian Ocean Region.

Addressing Tanzania National Business Council, Hassan said: "Regarding the Bagamoyo Port project, let me give you the good news that we have started talks to revive the whole project. We are going to start talks with the investors that came for the project with the aim of opening it for the benefit of our nation."

The Economic Times noted in a report last month that, during a 2013 visit to Tanzania, Xi and the then-Tanzanian President Jakaya Kikwete agreed on a framework between China Merchants Holdings International, China's largest port operator, and the Tanzania government to develop a road map for the Bagamoyo project.

The project stalled a few years later due to Magufuli's objection.

Among the conditions of the agreement that Magufuli disliked were requests from China that no other port should be built in Tanzania, Japan's Nikkei Asia reported.

After negotiations on the Bagamoyo project stalled, China focused on port development in Djibouti, where the communist nation has its sole overseas naval base.

Jan. 6 was not a first: Report details 5 earlier cases of FBI incitement

By WorldTribune

Last month it was reported that FBI operatives may have helped organize and incite the breach of the U.S. Capitol on Jan. 6, according to documents obtained by the independent media site Revolver News.

On July 21, WorldTribune.com reported that FBI assets had controlled nearly every aspect of the plot to kidnap Michigan Gov. Gretchen Whitmer.

Also on July 21, Revolver reported on five other cases which, the report said, only touches "the surface of the FBI's long history of entrapment/incitement schemes."

1993 World Trade Center bombing

The 1993 bombing killed six people and injured more than a thousand, but, if the bomb had succeeded in its intended purpose, toppling the North Tower into the South, it might have claimed tens of thousands of lives.

The bomb was built with the help of an FBI informant, Egyptian immigrant Emad Salem, who was a part of terror mastermind Ramzi Yousef's cell during the plotting of the attack. Salem, posing as an ex-Green Beret, was encouraged by the FBI to join the nascent New York Islamic extremist movement. Once Salem had penetrated the cell, instead of using him to thwart an attack, the FBI deliberately let the attack go forward.

According to secret tape recordings Salem made of his own conversations with the FBI, he said the bomb was built "by supervision from the Bureau (Federal Bureau of Investigation) and the D.A. (district attorney). We know that the bomb start to be built. By who? By your confidential informant. What a wonderful great case," according to a Reuters report in the Tampa Bay Times.

The FBI redeployed Salem as an intelligence asset, having him participate in a second plot to blow up additional targets in the New York City area.

But Salem wasn't just inciting violent extremism from others. He was also the key figure moving the plot along. He volunteered to build bombs, tested timing devices for them, and rented the group's safe house where he was going to mix the explosives. Salem's role in the plot was so central that arguably it simply would not have gotten off the ground without his

RC Sproul on the Pre-Born

"Before I formed thee the belly I knew thee; and before thou camest forth out of the womb I sanctified thee: and I ordained thee a prophet unto the nations." Jeremiah 1:5

By Riley J. Hood—Milwaukee County Constitution Party

RC Sproul is a Presbyterian theologian and founder of Ligonier Ministries. Sproul comments on the failure to properly identify mankind, "Plato sought desperately for a description that would clearly distinguish humans from all other species of animals. He finally chose 'featherless biped' as his working definition. This lasted only until one of Plato's students threw a plucked chicken over the academy wall with an attached note that read, 'Plato's man.'"

RC asserts the remedy, "Scripture assumes a continuity of life from before the time of birth to after the time of birth. The same language and the same personal pronouns are used indiscriminately for both stages. This passage supports the point: "For thou hast possessed my reins: thou hast covered me in my mother's womb. I will praise thee; for I am fearfully and wonderfully made: Psalm 139:13-14a" Sproul cites Isaiah 49:1, "Listen, O isles, unto me; and hearken, ye people, from far; The LORD hath called me from the womb; from the bowels of my mother hath he made mention of my name." This passage indicates not only that the unborn baby was distinct from the mother and was treated with a unique personal identity, but that his formation in the womb was the activity of God. A similar treatment concerns the Prophet Jeremiah:" RC declares, "Every child has a past before birth."

Professor John Frame, commented on Psalm 51:5, "Personal continuity extends back in time to the point of conception." RC adds, "In Psalm 51, David recounts his personal moral history to the point of conception. An impersonal being, a "blob of protoplasm," cannot be a moral agent." RC Comments on Luke 1:40-44, "Upon their meeting, John, while still in the womb of his mother, leaped for joy," adding, "In this instance, John performed his prophetic duty before either he or Jesus was born. These verses show that before John was born, he exhibited cognition and emotion. He leaped because he was in a state of joy. The joy was prompted by his recognition of the presence of the Messiah."

RC asserts the obvious, "The moment of conception combines forty-six genes so that a unique individual begins the process of personal human development. After two weeks, there is a discernible heartbeat. The heart circulates blood within the embryo that is not the mother's blood, but blood the unborn baby has produced. After about six weeks, the embryo is still less than an inch long but has undergone considerable development."

RC quotes John Owen, "Paul tells us of the old Gentiles that they were 'without natural affection.' That which he aims at is that barbarous custom among the Romans, who oft times, to spare the trouble in the education of their children and to be at liberty to satisfy their lusts, destroyed their own children from the womb." RC concludes, "Lawrence Tribe, a well-known professor of constitutional law at Harvard, is forced to admit that abortion can only be advocated by those who have jettisoned the last remaining remnants of biblical orthodoxy. He essentially and accurately defines the titanic struggle between pro-lifers and pro-choicers as the struggle between Christian absolutes and pagan absolutes."

The Milwaukee County Constitution Party agrees with JC Ryle's declaration, "Zeal will make a man hate everything that God hates, such as drunkenness, slavery, or infanticide, and long to sweep it from the face of the earth." We assert if Ryle lived in our times, abortion would be added to the list. We are willing to take off the gloves and fight for the pre-born. The Pre-Born Can't Wait petition aims center mass, the overturn of Roe v Wade, and the re-criminalization of abortion, punishing the perpetrators as the murderers they are. We make no exceptions and we won't quit.

The UN is a Foreign Jurisdiction

"Though hand join in hand, the wicked shall not be unpunished." Proverbs 11:21

By Riley J. Hood—Milwaukee County Constitution Party

In 1995, in Milwaukee WI, a group of veterans, pastors, and Christians burned the UN Flag in a demonstration of support for Army medic Michael New. New showed up in formation in an American uniform, and not the UN blue helmet and arm band. People were confused about the statement made by the UN flag burning and tried to equate it to draft-dodgers burning "Old Glory." One of the main differences between the two actions is that the UN is a foreign jurisdiction.

Most people think of the USA as a "good idea", and then misdirect that thinking toward the UN; thinking that it is a bigger expanded version of America. Nothing could be further from the truth.

The USA is a representative republic, founded on, "The Laws of Nature, and of Nature's God." Sir William Blackstone, authored that phrase stating, "This law of nature dictated by God himself, is of course superior in obligation to any other. It is binding over all the globe, in all countries, at all times: no human laws are of any validity if contrary to this." Sir William also went on to say, "Upon these two foundations, the law of nature and the law of revelation, depend all human laws; that is to say, no human laws should be suffered to contradict these." This was taken from Blackstone's Commentaries on the Laws of England; which actually had a greater influence in the American colonies than in the author's home country. America has a system of Federalism with a Constitution that limits the Federal Government to dealing with foreign Nations, and regulating issues that are "Inter-State" in nature. Domestic issues are legitimately to be handled at the State and Local level, if handled by the civil government at all. Limits on governmental power were in place.

The UN on the other hand, is structured like a Communist government. The Security Council acts as the "Politburo" and the UN Assembly rubbers stamps their wishes like the "Supreme Soviet" did. The UN is not a Union of 50, free, sovereign States. The UN is a union of Islamic, Communist, and Socialist Nations. It is a farce forum, where rogue dictators from Cuba, North Korea, China, Iran, and Syria can label America as a violator of "Human Rights." It is a gaggle of buffoons, who walk into the assembly and bang shoes on a podium. The UN building at NYC is a foreign jurisdiction on American soil. A friend of mine visited the UN building and the tour guide arrogantly lisped, "You are no longer on American soil, the UN is a sovereign jurisdiction." Note the Muslim left that building standing on 9/11.

The UN is based on the "sovereignty of man", and the Socialist State as evidenced in their Universal Declaration of Human Rights. Article 29 Section 1, "Everyone has duties to the community in which alone the free and full development of his personality is possible." Section 2, "In exercise of his rights and freedoms, everyone shall be subject only to such limitations as are determined by law solely for the purpose of securing due recognition and respect for the rights and freedoms of others and meeting the just requirements of morality, public order and general welfare in a democratic society." Section 3, "These rights and freedoms may in no case be exercised contrary to the purposes and principles of the United Nations." In other words, "Human Rights" are socialistic privileges which are granted by, and taken away by the State. Human Rights are duties to the community: God-given Rights are duties toward God. The American view is that government power is limited to secure God-Given Rights.

The Milwaukee County Constitution Party supports pulling out of the UN, we also view the UN as a foreign jurisdiction and an enemy to our American Republic. We reject it in all its forms, including; UNICEF, UNESCO, NATO, SEATO, IMF, WTO, NAFTA, GATT, FTAA, the World-Bank, Agenda 21 and many others. We reject the UN World Court, The UN Human Rights Commissions, and all UN Treaties. We encourage the citizens of America to view politicians who embrace these things with loathing, and work to have these traitors replaced by real American citizens.

When the plot was punctured and the participants (other than Salem) arrested, he was paid more than a million dollars for his work and subsequent testimony, the NY Times reported at the time.

2015 Garland, Texas shooting

Elton Simpson and Nadir Hamid Soofi hoped to kill dozens of unbelievers and achieve a glorious martyrdom by attacking an exhibit in Garland which featured images of the prophet Muhammad. Instead, they were both shot by off-duty Garland police officer Gregory Stevens just seconds into their attack, before being finished off by SWAT officers.

Simpson and Soofi were both wearing body armor and were armed with six guns and more than 1,500 rounds of ammunition. And if innocents had been killed, it would have been entirely due to the actions of the FBI, according to the Revolver News report:

When Simpson and Soofi drove to the site of the attack, an FBI agent was in a car right behind them. That informant was dressed in Middle Eastern garb, and looked the part so well that local police nearly shot him in the mayhem. That informant also actively abetted the attack. Merely a week before the shooting, when Simpson shared a link about the upcoming cartoon contest, the agent replied by urging him to "tear up Texas." Simpson replied by saying the agent didn't have to be so overt about what was to be done.

After the attack, the FBI claimed that despite their agent being in direct contact with one of the shooters beforehand, the entire thing was a huge coincidence. The agent, they said, was at the Muhammad cartoon contest as part of another infiltration operation, and was surprised as anyone to see the other two attackers there (so surprised, apparently, that instead of trying to stop the attackers he simply fled the scene in a

The Muslim Report: Tunisia

"Fear not, O land; be glad and rejoice: for the Lord will do great things." Joel 2:21

By Riley J. Hood—Milwaukee County Constitution Party

The Government of Tunisia banned the niqab, a full-face covering worn by Muslim women. The Jihadi fashion statement was outlawed by Ben-Ali, who was overthrown during Barak Hussein Obama's "Arab Spring." The Arab Spring brought in a Sharia Government which tormented the small Church in that nation. Most Christians in Tunisia are ex-patriots.

In 2008 the percentage of Muslims was 98%. A coalition government has been formed, and the Shariah Party is called Enhadda. The Muslim population, is now 99.8% of the nation of over 11.5 million people. About a fifth of the of the nation dresses in robes and turbans, the rest of the people are more modern, but then again so was Iran before 1979.

The Tunisian Ministry of religion has a large Islamic section, headed by an Imam, a small Jewish section headed by a Rabbi, and no Christian section. The few Church buildings are historic sites, linked with foreign Churches. Because Christianity is not recognized, underground groups cannot "legally" build Churches. In post "quasi-demic" world, Tunisian Christians are now meeting, and the government is exercising "benign neglect." In tyrants, that can be good a thing. It should be remembered that North Africa had a Christian Community from the late first century to 647AD when the Muslim arrived can largely destroyed it.

The Muslim Report: Burundi

"My little children, let us not love in word, neither in tongue; but in deed and in truth." I John 3:18

By Riley J. Hood—Milwaukee County Constitution Party

The area was colonized by the Germans, in 1891 and then the Belgians, after they defeated the Germans in German East Africa in 1916 during WWI. It was united with neighboring Rwanda, and called Ruanda-Urundi from 1922-1962. They were handed Independence in 1962. The area was split into Burundi and Rwanda. There was a Kingdom of Burundi extant from the 1600's, but the origins are considered oral legends, and they are looking to archeology for validation. Like Rwanda, Burundi has a mixture of Hutu and Tutsi's. After independence, Burundi allied itself with Communist China.

In 1972, Hutu rebels massacred over 8,000 Tutsi in the city of Bururi. The Burundi government lowered the boom. University of Florida Professor René Lemarchand states, "What followed was not so much a repression as a hideous slaughter of Hutu civilians. The carnage went on unabated through the month of August. By then virtually every educated Hutu element, down to secondary school students, was either dead or in flight." Over 200,000 Hutu were reported as murdered and anther 300,000 fled.

There has been a series of coups, either by the Military or socialists. The Rwandan genocide also flared in Burundi, staring in 1993 and led to over a decade of Civil War, with another 300,000 people murdered.

By 2019 the US state Department estimated the total population at 12.2 million people. According to the 2008 CIA Factbook, taken from a 2008 national census, about 86 percent of the population of Burundi is Christian (62.1% being Roman Catholic, 23.9% being Protestant), 7.9% follow traditional religions, and 2.5 percent is Muslim (mainly Sunni). Barnabas AID assets that Burundi is 90% Christian. In spite of that kit is one of the poorest countries on earth. A travel alert from www.travelsafe-abroad.com reads, "violent crime rates are high throughout the country, and you can expect muggings, burglaries, carjackings and armed banditry on the roads. These occurrences are common and the risk increases after dark, so avoid going anywhere after nightfall." The point is, that like the American ghetto, there is a disconnect between a Christian profession and Christian behavior.

The socialist government is arresting pseudo-quasi-Christian groups. Seventh Day Adventists and Jehovah's Witnesses are banned as anti-government. (I oppose their theology, but these people still have rights.) The government encourages Christians to fight among each other, as opposed to suppressing crime, and uniting against the Islamic conquerors. The University of Pennsylvania African studies Dept. reports, "The government does not allow services on weekdays or the display of religious symbols on buildings other than churches. The Catholic Church's access to the media has been under attack as their newspaper and radio broadcasts face frequent suspensions."

The Burundi government has been taking bribes from Islamic nations. This is because the government is in debt, and is looking for a bailout. Suddenly, there has appeared Mosques, Islamic Health Centers, Madrassas, and an Islamic University. Islamic groups claim they are now over 10% of the Burundi population. See where this is going? The Muslim is taking over Burundi.

The Muslim Report: Nigeria

"Marvel not, my brethren, if the world hate you." I John 3:13

By Riley J. Hood—Milwaukee County Constitution Party

Leah Sharibu is 18 now, and she still a prisoner of Boko Haram. She was kidnapped four years ago at school in Dapchi.

On Christmas Eve 2020 Muslims murdered 24 people and kidnapped 20 more. One Islamic monstrosity bragged about, "Celebrate your Christmas with the present of these Christian heads." In another village, 5 Christians were singled out and shot.

On October 5th, 2020 in the village of Wereng, Plateau State, Muslims arms with automatic rifles and dressed in police uniforms attacked the village. They murdered 6 people. They targeted and murdered the headman Chungyang Mwadkon. Wereng has suffered repeated atrocities at the hands of Muslims, and there have been over 30 people murdered in the past year.

On November 6th, 2020 six Christians were murdered in an attack on the village of Ungwan Bido. Their names were Silas, Malaki, Geofree, Anna, Sunday and Fidelis. Joseph Swanta, on December 1st, 2020 heard gun fire. When there was a lull, he tried to help the victims of Islam. According to his mother Ruth, the firing began again and Muslims shot him in the chest. Two other Christians died, and a woman named Adegoke was kidnapped while reading her Bible on her bed.

Such are the results of the stupidity of Christians electing a Muslim to protect them. The fake President Buhari protects the Muslims. Nigeria is now mostly Islamic, and their majority will get larger and larger. What happened in Nigeria will happen here, if we do not get smarter, tougher and braver than our Islamic enemy.

The Muslim Report: Azerbaijan

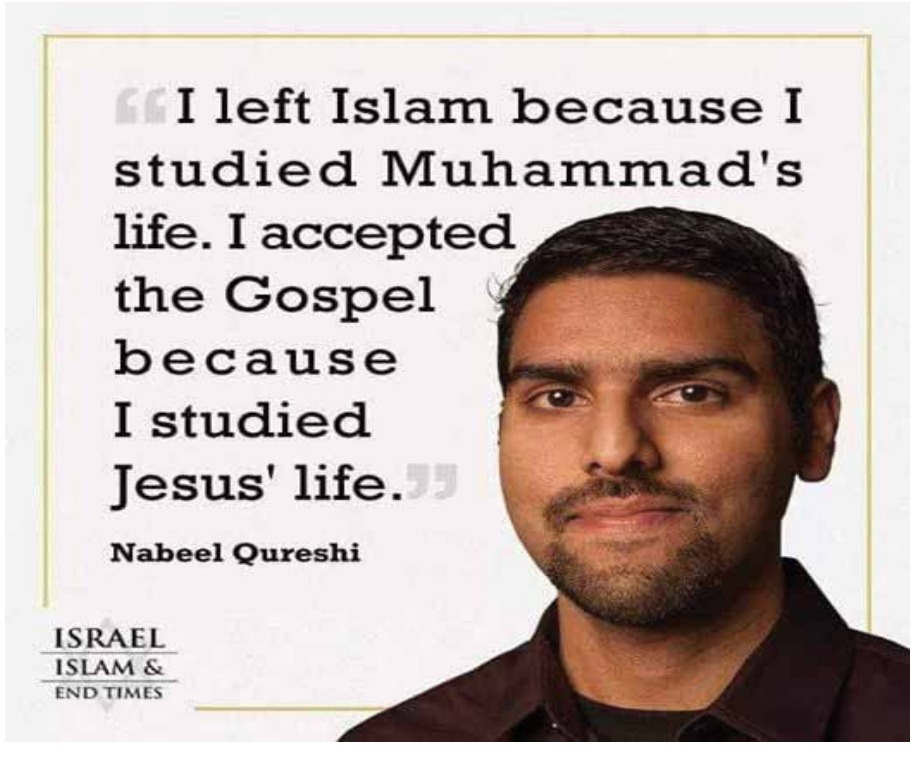
"I am for peace: but when I speak, they are for war." Psalm 120:7

By Riley J. Hood—Milwaukee County Constitution Party

Azerbaijan is 96% Muslim. In the 1980's many Christian Armenians fled their homes, because of the Islamic government's ethnic cleansing policy. A Muslim lady named Rena was a snitch. She persecuted her sister and her mother, both of whom left Islam. They became Christian, by reading a New Testament. Rena's mother said, "If you knew about this book, you would want to read it." One day Rena lost the family cow, and after receiving no answer from Allah, prayed to Jesus. Rena saw the cow, running across a road, dodging traffic, and it came right toward her. Rena started believing after that. I'm glad for Rena, her family and her Church, but a personal answer to prayer from God doesn't excuse us of our responsibility to provide for our own, and stand in our own defense. No one questions the goodness of God, but one must confront doctrine when it is being used as an excuse.

In September of 2020, Azerbaijan attacked an Armenian enclave, and took over the area. This will reduce the Christian population further, as roughly half the population in Nagorno-Karabahk has fled. When a cease-fire was called on November 10th, the Azeri's kept all the territory they took. The Azeris have also been beheading prisoners of war, and in one case two elderly civilians dressed military fatigues. The Azeri leadership means to conquer the whole of Armenian, so do the bloodthirsty Turks. According to Ahmad Shahidov, "A new war with Armenia is now inevitable."

An Azeri woman was interviewed by a Turkish YouTube about her thoughts on the Armenian Christians, and she said, "I would cut the heads off of 20 Armenians. Yes, and I wouldn't feel bad about it." She reflects the national mood of Azerbaijan, which is in reality the Islamic world-view. She is not a "bad Muslim" she is a typical Muslim.



Doctor who vaccinated 900 calls blood clots at capillary level an 'absolutely new phenomenon'

By WorldTribune

A Canadian doctor who has given the Covid vaccine to more than 900 patients has reported that 62 percent of those patients are positive for blood clots.

Dr. Charles Hoffe, who has been practicing medicine for 28 years in British Columbia, said he has given about 900 doses of the Moderna experimental mRNA vaccine and the core problem he has seen are microscopic clots in his patients' tiniest capillaries.

Hoffe said the blood clots are "occurring at a capillary level. This has never before been seen. This is not a rare disease. This is an absolutely new phenomenon."

The micro-clots, Hoffe said, are too small to show up on CT scans, MRI, and other conventional tests, such as angiograms. They can only be detected using the D-dimer blood test, he said.

Using the D-dimer test, Hoffe said he found that 62 of his patients injected with an mRNA shot were positive for clotting, Dr. Joel S. Hirschhorn noted in an April 7 op-ed for the No Q Report.

The spike proteins in the vaccine become "part of the cell wall of your vascular endothelium," the doctor said. "This means that these cells which line your blood vessels, which are supposed to be smooth so that your blood flows smoothly now have these little spikey bits sticking out. … When the platelet comes through the capillary it suddenly hits all these Covid spikes and it becomes absolutely inevitable that blood clots will form to block that vessel."

Hoffe added: "The blood clots we hear about which the media claim are very rare are the big blood clots which are the ones that cause strokes and show up on CT scans, MRI, etc. The clots I'm talking about are microscopic and too small to find on any scan. They can thus only be detected using the D-dimer test. … The most alarming part of this is that there are some parts of the body like the brain, spinal cord, heart and lungs which cannot re-generate. When those tissues are damaged by blood clots they are permanently damaged."

Hoffe continued: "Blood vessels in the lungs are now blocked up. In turn, this causes the heart to need to work harder to try to keep up against a much greater resistance trying to get the blood through your lungs. This is called pulmonary artery hypertension – high blood pressure in the lungs because the blood simply cannot get through effectively. People with this condition usually die of heart failure within a few short years."

In an April letter to the provincial Ministry of Health, Hoffe cited a high rate of serious side-effects from the vaccine he was administering: "It must be emphasized, that these people were not sick people, being treated for some devastating disease. These were previously healthy people, who were offered an experimental therapy, with unknown long-term side-effects, to protect them against an illness that has the same mortality rate as the flu. Sadly, their lives have now been ruined."

In a June report, Dr. Peter McCullough noted: "So, this is a very different type of blood clotting that we would see with major blood clots in the arteries and veins. For instance, blood clots involved in stroke and heart attack."

McCullough added: "Blood clots involved in major blood vessels in the legs. This was a different type of clotting and in fact the Italians courageously did some autopsies and found micro blood clots in the lungs. And so, we understood in the end, the reason why the lungs fail is not because the virus is there. It is because micro blood clots are there. … When People can't breathe, the problem is micro-blood clotting in the lungs. … The spicule on the ball of the virus itself which damages blood vessels that causes blood clotting."

McCullough has also openly stated that none of the Covid vaccines are safe for most people at little risk from the virus.

Hirschhorn noted that the Public Health Agency of Canada (PHAC) in July confirmed 27 cases of vaccine-related blood clotting in Canadians who have received the AstraZeneca vaccine, with five deaths among those cases.

A Yale University report on the Johnson & Johnson vaccine reported 6 of 28 deaths following vaccine-related blood clotting.

"Also noted was that these were a particularly rare and dangerous blood clot in the brain, known as cerebral venous sinus thrombosis (CVST), because it appears in the brain's venous sinuses Also noted that there were abnormally low platelet levels in their blood, an unusual situation also found for those impacted by the AstraZeneca vaccine," Hirschhorn noted.

VERY BAD NEWS

THE COVID-19 INJECTIONS SHOULD STOP IMMEDIATELY – DANGEROUS AND INEFFECTIVE.

BAD NEWS – THE SPRING/SUMMER 2021 COVID-19 CASE SPIKES WERE CAUSED BY THE VACCINES, NOT THE VIRUS

I emailed the following to Jo Nova way back on June 27, 2021:

I suspect the "third wave" of ("case-driven") lockdowns in the spring of 2021 was primarily caused not by the virus, but by the injections. But we locked down again anyway.

My fear is we will have generations of Covid-cripples who will have been severely harmed by the injections. Hope to be wrong.

And on July 21, 2021 I emailed Brian Peckford and a friend:

Worst case being the Covid-19 injections are toxic and there is a large death and injury toll – millions of Covid vaccine cripples within a few years.

Look at the Summer 2021 case spikes in England and Israel – my best guess is these are caused by the vaccines – this is NOT a Summer flu.

And on August 3, 2021 I emailed two physician friends:

I wrote one week ago on July 26, 2021:

"My 40% to 60% probability prediction is that inside two years, +/- one year the people who have received vaccines will become vaccine cripples, in various states of ill health caused directly by the vaccines, not by the COVID-19 virus."

Covid is NOT a summer flu – it is highly seasonal and tends to peak in January as it did in 2021.

So why this July spike in "cases",

- Is this July case spike a result of poor testing methodology?

- Or is it NOT a result of the virus, but rather a reaction to the "vaccines", which have adverse effects that mimic the virus?

On August 6, 2021 I published:

I am sick about this – so many of my friends and relatives have taken the toxic Covid-19 injections.

FYI Jo – from Canadian MD's.

Our hospitals were ~emptied ~15March2020 for 8 weeks for the anticipate "tsunami of Covid-19 cases" that never came. One 600-bed hospital in Calgary had an average of ~2 Covid cases during this time. Covid deaths of under-65's in Alberta to 1Dec2020 totaled 13, or 1 in 300,000 of population. For this, we locked down on and off for 15 months. I say that was a huge error.

Cancer patients stopped their diagnostics and even some treatments. Opioid OD deaths more than doubled to over 500 due to the lockdown. Kids lost a year of school. Mental health problems exploded. Tens of thousands of business went under. Family violence, suicides etc are way up.

Covid deaths in Alberta totaled ~500 to 1Dec2020. Average age of Covid death in Alberta as 82, vs a life expectancy of 78.

I suspect the "third wave" of lockdowns in the spring of 2021 was primarily caused not by the virus, but by the injections. But we locked down again anyway.

My fear is we will have generations of Covid-cripples who will have been severely harmed by the injections. Hope to be wrong.

Unfortunately, the good news didn't last. At the beginning of June, Covid cases started to rise in both Israel and Britain. And in the last three weeks, cases have soared, rising 15-fold since mid-May in the United Kingdom.

The reported number of new cases in the UK has risen to a high of 46,460 as of 22Jul2021, vs a peak of ~60,000 circa 1Jan2021.

This July 2021 rise in cases is also being reported in Israel – another highly-vaccinated country.

Don't expect to get the right answer from the UK government – their track record on Covid management has been dismal.

Pompeo tells CFACT how climate puts America last

By Craig Rucker

"If you stand for Climate Change First, you stand for America Last."

Former Secretary of State Mike Pompeo tweeted that out on May 29th, and of course the usual suspects went apoplectic.

Pompeo was right. He explained just how right in an exclusive interview with CFACT's Gabriella Hoffman, saying:

Former Secretary Kerry is driving the central thesis of this administration's foreign policy. Ours was America First, we were unambiguous. When I met with my counterparts around the world, it was pretty clear Mike Pompeo showed up to make sure Americans were more prosperous and more secure and safer. When this administration has these conversations, if the other side will offer them a little bit of a carbon reduction, or, worse yet, a promise of some future carbon reduction—kind of like Wimpy's "burger tomorrow," these folks are willing to trade things that matter, the security interests that matter to the American people. So my comments were, we all want clean air, we all want safe drinking water, but to hand over the American economy to bust the American worker to get the Green New Deal done on the back of the American worker does indeed put America behind the interests of other countries.

The fact is that China emits more greenhouse gases (if that's your thing) than the rest of the developed world combined. The Chinese build coal plants as fast as their economy can churn them out. Affordable energy for China and expensive energy for the U.S. definitely puts America last. If you want to kill jobs that's how you do it.

CFACT's Marc Morano underscores the point in our first "Morano Minute," when he asks and answers the question, why can't Biden staffers stop smiling about skyrocketing gas prices?" Watch now.

This episode is the first of CFACT's new "Morano Minute" series, a weekly installment featuring host Marc Morano, to counter the misinformation of the radical Green movement and delve into the climate news and analysis you won't get anywhere else. You'll want to make sure to keep abreast of new episodes by following CFACT's YouTube page here.

America worked for generations to achieve energy independence. The Biden Administration is throwing all that progress away, to the detriment of our economy and defense, with no meaningful benefit to the climate or the environment.

Fuel for Thought

Here's some interesting facts:

Total fuel consumption of U.S. airlines is approximately 19 billion gallons annually.

Total fuel consumption for mining Ore for construction of electric car batteries is approximately 21 billion gallons annually.

The 21 billion gallons of fuel burned can only produce enough Ore to build 250,000 electric car batteries.

The lifespan of an electric battery is 10 years and is not renewable. By 2050, these batteries will fill landfills with 50 million pounds of waste that does not break down.

I wonder, if people would still believe in electric power cars, vehicles or equipment if they knew how massive the carbon emissions footprint really was?

Well, you're absolutely right, I should say, Alex, in that we have to be very careful and we are mindful of being quite careful of not politicizing the effectiveness of vaccines. The fact that they can save lives, young people, old people, middle-of-the-road people. It's important for us, we've made a calculation, to push back on misinformation. You're right.

[Possible Civil Discovery: Identify all the information relied upon in making the calculation to push back on misinformation? Who reviewed the data to make that determination and was all the data subject to the guidelines of the Information Quality Act?]

Jen Psaki: (20:22)

But that's one of the reasons, as Dr. Murthy was conveying, we have empowered, engaged, funded local voices because they are often the most trusted voices. Doctors, medical experts, clergy, people who are civic leaders in communities. That's where we are putting most of our resources, even as we are working to combat misinformation that's traveling online or traveling, unfortunately out of the mouths of elected officials from time to time."

[Possible Civil Discovery: Identification of all local "trusted" voices to be participants in the administration's outreach, as well as what resources the administration deploying and the cost of such effort?]

With the July 15, 2021 press conference, Jen Psaki, opened up the administration to answer questions under oath in a civil deposition or by written question. This discovery will likely be used by Trump's attorneys. With even reasonably good lawyering, the public will discover what the Biden administration believes is misinformation and what is good information, who possesses which type of information, and the rigors of ensuring "good information" is tested against the Information Quality Act. It will also let the public know what information the Biden administration wants us to know is the "truth." That by itself will be interesting in a day when 58% of people believe media has become "the enemy of the people."

petro-fueled vehicles by adding millions of electric vehicle (EV) plug-in marvels to our overloaded power grid that can be recharged during hot, high power-demand windless and sunless evenings which depend upon rare earth materials obtained from China that controls 80% of the world supply?

Well okay.

But first, how's that working out so far in California?

The California Independent System Operator (California ISO) anticipates that the state will experience substantial risks of rolling blackouts during July and August as it did last summer if it can't get some electricity bailouts from neighboring states that will encounter the same needs.

A severe drought has reduced hydroelectric generation by about 1,000 megawatts. On top of that, about 300 megawatts of gas-fired generation is expected to be offline this summer.

California ISO, which covers about 80% of the state, estimates that the grid will run about 2,000 megawatts short of an adequate margin throughout special air conditioning demands during a regional Pacific Northwest heat wave. One megawatt can power roughly 750 homes.

California plans to ban sales of new gas-powered cars in the state by 2035. Since power demands will be most acute in the evening and nighttime hours when the sun is down, future requirements will be greatly exacerbated during periods when millions of replacement EVs are to be recharged.

This present shortage is occurring as surges in air conditioning usage in neighboring states leave them with little or no electricity to spare. Nevertheless, they likely won't have any choice.

It just so happens that California ISO manages critical interconnections between utilities and power providers across the West. Arizona utilities, for instance, contract with hydropower plants in the Northwest that is transmitted through California.

And after all, deep blue California has powerful friends in Washington, D.C.

So late last month the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission (FERC) approved a request by California ISO to prioritize electricity moving through California to meet its own demands during emergencies. This will allow California ISO to override utility contracts and expropriate power destined for other states.

Unsurprisingly, California's FERC end-run caper wasn't appreciated by utilities and their regulators in Arizona, Nevada, New Mexico and Oregon who have protested California's power grab.

Arizona Corporation Commission Chairwoman Lea Márquez Peterson noted, "Our electric utilities did the right thing and planned ahead, securing pre-negotiated contracts with utilities in the Pacific Northwest to ensure that critical hydropower would be available to Arizonans when it is needed the most." California didn't.

FERC's reward to loyal California Biden administration fossil energy cancel culture cohorts will come at the expense of businesses and residents in those other Western states who, along with electricity shortages, will also wind up paying more for power on the spot market.

Ironically, these states have also been saddled with pressures to address climate goals with increased reliance on intermittent and unreliable wind and solar systems. Even if states like Arizona and Nevada were to import wind power from the Midwest, they'd still be vulnerable to weather vagaries.

And despite rampant climate lunacy, they know it.

As more states lean on old, reliable, and abundant fossil fuels this summer to keep the power on, even uber-woke California Gov. Gavin Newsom has waived air quality regulations to allow gas-fired and diesel generators to keep his office and his political constituency cool.

And yes, unpredictable weather does indeed present extreme conditions. For example, lack of preparation caused a devastating Texas power outage in February after our wind turbines here froze and not enough natural gas plants could ramp up to compensate.

Then there's Illinois, where Democrat-proposed legislation, if passed, will dramatically hike electricity prices and kill jobs in heavily Republican southern counties.

An 800-page "climate bill" that a Democrat supermajority is contriving to ram through the Springfield Statehouse would force shutdowns of all downstate coal plants by 2035, and natural gas generators by 2045.

Given that coal plants typically have a useful life of 50 to 60 years, and gas plants of 30 to 40 years, this means that many of the most recently constructed generators — which are cleaner-burning than the older ones — will be retired decades early.

One of these costly casualties would be southwestern Illinois' giant Prairie State Energy Campus, a plant using coal from a nearby mine built only a decade ago which serves 2.5 million customers across the Midwest.

Some 300 municipalities and rural electric cooperatives that borrowed $5 billion to finance Prairie State's development will be left on the hook for bond payments years after the plant is forced to shut down … essentially foreclosed by the state.

It gets worse.

Ratepayers — meaning Illinois businesses and residents — will also get stuck with paying for Prairie State's decommissioning costs along with subsidies for a myriad of speculative Obama-era future non-shovel-ready green energy programs to help workers who lose their jobs.

Forcing fossil fuel plants to close will give downstate Illinois residents two options: either import coal and gas from other Midwest states, or be plunged into darkness.

As with conditions everywhere, solar and wind simply don't provide reliable "baseload" power — i.e., electricity that can be generated around the clock.

Conveniently, predominantly Democrat upstate residents in Chicago and surrounding counties who control Springfield politics don't face the same dilemma because they connect to a separate regional grid known as PJM.

PJM has abundant baseload power provided by nuclear plants. Little wonder then, why the proposed Democrat bill includes $700 million in subsidies for three struggling Exelon nuclear plants in northern Illinois.

In 2016 the state bailed out two Exelon nuclear generators, but the company is threatening to close two others this year if it doesn't get another round of financing.

So although electricity rates would increase across the state, downstate would get slammed the hardest.

Democrats are expected to buy off unions to pass the bill, sending costs even higher.

Nevertheless, we can pretty much bet that it will happen.

It's the California and Chicago way.

Viganò: Deep State and Church will bring new world religion and order

By LifeSiteNews

The following text comes from Archbishop Carlo Maria Viganò.

LAPIDES CLAMABUNT

Dico vobis quia si hii tacuerint, lapides clamabunt.

I say to you that if these are silent, the stones will cry out.

Lk 19:40

Traditionis custodes: this is the incipit of the document with which Francis imperiously cancels the previous Motu Proprio Summorum Pontificum of Benedict XVI. The almost mocking tone of the bombastic quotation from Lumen Gentium will not have escaped notice: just when Bergoglio recognizes the Bishops as guardians of the Tradition, he asks them to obstruct its highest and most sacred expression of prayer. Anyone who tries to find within the folds of the text some escamotage to circumvent the text should know that the draft sent to the Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith for revision was extremely more drastic than the final text: a confirmation, if ever it were needed, that no particular pressure was needed from of the historical enemies of the Tridentine Liturgy – beginning with the scholars of Sant'Anselmo – to convince His Holiness to try his hand at what he does best: demolishing. Ubi solitudinem faciunt, pacem appellant.[1]

The Modus Operandi of Francis

Francis has once again disavowed the pious illusion of the hermeneutic of continuity, stating that the coexistence of the Vetus and Novus Ordo is impossible because they are expressions of two irreconcilable doctrinal and ecclesiological approaches. On the one hand there is the Apostolic Mass, the voice of the Church of Christ; on the other there is the Montinian "Eucharistic celebration," the voice of the conciliar church. And this is not an accusation, however legitimate, made by those who express reservations about the reformed rite and Vatican II. Rather it is an admission, indeed a proud affirmation of ideological adherence on the part of Francis himself, the head of the most extremist faction of progressivism. His dual role as pope and liquidator of the Catholic Church allows him on the one hand to demolish it with decrees and acts of governance, and on the other hand to use the prestige that his office entails to establish and spread the new religion over the rubble of the old one.

It matters little if the ways in which he acts against God, against the Church and against the Lord's flock are in stark conflict with his appeals to parrhesia, to dialogue, to building bridges and not erecting walls: the church of mercy and the field hospital turn out to be empty rhetorical devices, since it ought to be Catholics who benefit from them and not heretics or fornicators. In reality, each of us is well aware that Amoris Laetitia's indulgence towards public concubinage and adulterers would hardly be imaginable towards those "rigid" ones against whom Bergoglio hurls his darts as soon as he has the opportunity.

After years of this pontificate, we have all understood that the reasons given by Bergoglio for declining a meeting with a Prelate, a politician or a conservative intellectual do not apply to the molester Cardinal, the heretic Bishop, the abortionist politician, or the globalist intellectual. In short, there is a blatant difference in behavior, from which one can grasp the partiality and partisanship of Francis in favor of any ideology, thought, project, scientific, artistic or literary expression that is not Catholic. Anything that even only vaguely evokes anything Catholic seems to arouse in the tenant of Santa Marta an aversion that is disconcerting to say the least, if only in virtue of the Throne on which he is seated. Many have noted this dissociation, this sort of bipolarity of a pope who does not behave like a Pope and does not speak like a Pope.

The problem is that we are not faced with a sort of inaction from the Papacy, as could happen with a sick or very old Pontiff; but rather with a constant action that is organized and planned in a sense diametrically opposed to the very essence of the Papacy. Not only does Bergoglio not condemn the errors of the present time by strongly reaffirming the Truth of the Catholic Faith – he has never done this! – but he actively seeks to disseminate these errors, to promote them, to encourage their supporters, to spread them to the greatest possible extent and to host events promoting them in the Vatican, simultaneously silencing those who denounce these same errors.

Not only does he not punish fornicating Prelates, but he even promotes and defends them by lying, while he removes conservative Bishops and does not hide his annoyance with the heartfelt appeals of Cardinals not aligned with the new course. Not only does he not condemn abortionist politicians who proclaim themselves Catholics, but he intervenes to prevent the Episcopal Conference from pronouncing on this matter, contradicting that synodal path which conversely allows him to use a minority of ultra-progressives to impose his will on the majority of the Synod Fathers.

The one constant of this attitude, noted in its most brazen and arrogant form in Traditionis Custodes, is duplicity and lies. A duplicity that is a facade, of course, daily disavowed by positions that are anything but prudent in favor of a very specific group, which for the sake of brevity we can identify with the ideological Left, indeed with its most recent evolution in a globalist, ecologist, transhuman and LGBTQ key. We have come to the point that even simple people with little knowledge of doctrinal issues understand that we have a non-Catholic pope, at least in the strict sense of the term. This poses some problems of a canonical nature that are not inconsiderable, which it is not up to us to solve but which sooner or later will have to be addressed.

Ideological extremism

Another significant element of this pontificate, taken to its extreme consequences with Traditionis Custodes, is Bergoglio's ideological extremism: an extremism that is deplored in words when it concerns others, but which shows itself in its most violent and ruthless expression when it is he himself who puts it into practice against clergy and laity connected to the ancient rite and faithful to Sacred Tradition. Towards the Society of Saint Pius X he shows himself willing to make concessions and to establish a relationship as "good neighbors," but towards the poor priests and faithful who have to endure a thousand humiliations and blackmail in order to beg for a Mass in Latin, he shows no understanding, no humanity.

This behavior is not accidental: Archbishop Lefebvre's movement enjoys its own autonomy and economic independence, and for this reason it has no reason to fear retaliation or commissioners from the Holy See. But the Bishops, priests and clerics incardinated in dioceses or religious Orders know that hanging over them is the sword of Damocles of removal from office, dismissal from the ecclesiastical state, and the deprivation of their very means of subsistence.

The experience of the Tridentine mass in priestly life

Those who have had the opportunity to follow my speeches and declarations know well what my position is on the Council and on the Novus Ordo; but they also know what my background is, my curriculum in the service of the Holy See and my relatively recent awareness of the apostasy and the crisis in which we find ourselves.

For this reason, I would like to reiterate my understanding for the spiritual path of those who, precisely because of this situation, cannot or are not yet able to make a radical choice, such as celebrating or attending exclusively the Mass of St. Pius V. Many priests discover the treasures of the venerable Tridentine Liturgy only when they celebrate it and allow themselves to be permeated by it, and it is not uncommon for an initial curiosity towards the "extraordinary form" – certainly fascinating due panic). The fact an FBI agent was in a car directly behind the attackers at the moment they arrived and started their attack was just a huge fluke worthy of a sitcom like Arrested Development.

The FBI has avoided full transparency in the matter to this day (even now, the agent's name isn't public).

Hal Turner

Hal Turner started as a frequent caller to Sean Hannity's radio program and later ran his own online radio program while also participating in local grassroots activism in New Jersey. Routinely, Turner's rhetoric turned violent: He called for American citizens to gun down illegal immigrants and suggested that white people would have to lynch blacks and Hispanics if street crime wasn't brought under control.

In 2006, Turner announced, according to a Daily Voice report: "We may have to ASSASSINATE some of the people you elect on Nov. 7! If you are too stupid to turn things around with your vote, there are people out here like me who are willing to turn things around with guns, force and violence. We hope our method does not become necessary."

In 2008, Turner specifically promoted violence against a local school official for introducing a pro-gay and pro-"diversity" curriculum.

In 2009, Turner called for the murder of federal judges Frank Easterbrook, Richard Posner, and William Bauer after they upheld Chicago's strict handgun ban.

Shortly after, Turner was arrested and charged with making criminal threats to intimidate the judges.

But as his trial proceeded, Turner made a stunning revelation: He had been acting on the FBI's orders the whole time:

As NorthJersey.com reported: They called him "Valhalla." But it was more than a nickname. For more than five years, Hal Turner of North Bergen lived a double life. The public knew him as an ultra-right-wing radio talk show host and Internet blogger with an audience of neo-Nazis and white supremacists attracted to his scorched-earth racism and bare-knuckles bashing of public figures. But to the FBI, and its expanding domestic counter-terror intelligence operations in the wake of the Sept. 11 attacks, Turner was "Valhalla" — his code name as an informant who spied on his own controversial followers.

The FBI claimed that Turner was only a fringe asset whose behavior was outside the FBI's control. That turned out to be a lie.

An FBI memo said Turner "has proven highly reliable and is in a unique position to provide vital information on multiple subversive domestic organizations," NewJersey.com reported. The memo went on to say that Turner's "statistical accomplishments include over 100 subjects identified, over 10 acts of violence prevented and multiple subjects arrested."

COINTELPRO

The FBI's famous 15-year-long Counter Intelligence Program, abbreviated COINTELPRO, is best-known for spying on Martin Luther King Jr. and sending him an anonymous letter encouraging him to commit suicide. COINTELPRO is also notorious for monitoring various anti-Vietnam War protesters.

But COINTELPRO's activities were far more eclectic than just espionage and smear tactics. The FBI also routinely employed agents provocateur in ways that clearly paved the way for shenanigans like the Whitmer kidnapping "plot."

From 1967 through 1970, Tommy Tongyai, better known as "Tommy the Traveler," hopped around the country posing as a radical member of Students for a Democratic Society, as detailed in an article by Andrew Wickenden for a Hobart and Williams Smith College publiation. In fact, Tongyai was an FBI informant, who persistently urged non-violent activists to up their game:

Two students at Hobart College, acting at Tongyai's urging, firebombed a campus ROTC building, and were then swiftly arrested and sentenced to several months in prison each.

COINTELPRO's activities were only exposed when the Citizens' Commission to Investigate the FBI, a left-wing activist group, broke into an FBI field office in the suburbs of Philadelphia, stole relevant documents, and then gave them to the media. As soon as the program became public, the FBI announced it would immediately stop all such activities. But that doesn't meant they did. According to ex-operative Joseph Burton, the FBI paid him to set up and lead a group of Maoist radicals, the Red Star Cadre. Burton says the FBI paid for the group's equipment, travel, and lodging when it journeyed to the 1972 Republican National Convention in Miami. While there, Burton encouraged demonstrators to try to topple a bus and then blow it up (they tried, but were unable to do so). He ran the group until 1974.

Herald Square Bomber

In 2004, Shahawar Matin Siraj, a bookstore employee, was recorded by FBI informant Osama Eldawoody "plotting" to bomb the Herald Square subway station in New York. He was arrested, convicted of engaging in a terrorist conspiracy, and sentenced to 30 years in prison.

Except, without Eldawoody's prodding, there would have been no "conspiracy" at all. Eldawoody, who was paid $100,000 for his informant work, actively inflamed anti-American sentiment in Siraj, acting as an older mentor who pushed him in the direction of violent action.

Eventually, Siraj tried to back out of the plan, but Eldawoody manipulated him to stay the course, as detailed by NY Times reports.

Siraj was eventually arrested, brought down in a plot whose entire existence hinged on an FBI instigator.

Military Arrests Bill Gates

By Michael Baxter @realrawnews.com

The U.S. military on Tuesday arrested Microsoft founder Bill Gates, charging the socially awkward misfit with child trafficking and other unspeakable crimes against America and its people.

Sources within the U.S. Navy Judge Advocate General's Corps told Real Raw News that the military had spent months trying to find Gates, but the elusive billionaire had used his wealth and Deep State contacts to elude capture, somehow keeping a step ahead of the military's manhunt.

But on Tuesday, July 27, Gates slipped up, and U.S. Marines were able to apprehend him at a property he secretly owned in Myrtle Beach, South Carolina.

The charges against Gates cover a broad spectrum. He purportedly coerced the FDA into issuing emergency authorization on Covid-19 vaccines, knowing that the potentially dangerous pharmaceutical cocktail would not only endanger recipients but also scramble human DNA. JAG is also investigating whether vaccines contain synthetic nanoparticles manufactured by Microsoft and Swedish biotech company Biohax International. The military alleges that Gates stood to profit massively from vaccine sales. Gates, who has previously denied having a financial stake in the vaccines, earned at least $10 billion from the joint sales of the Pfizer, Moderna, and Johnson & Johnson vaccinations, according to JAG documents. JAG is holding Gates partly responsible for the deaths of 7,000 American citizens who died within 72 hours of receiving the drug.

Moreover, the military has charged Gates with masterminding a child trafficking ring, which he ran with convicted pedophile Jeffrey Epstein. As reported by RRN on 20 May, U.S. Navy Seals operating under JAG authority stormed Gates' 492-acre ranch in northwest Wyoming and discovered a subterranean bunker where children had been temporarily housed prior to being sold into slavery. An SD card recovered at the scene showed a young girl in pajamas handcuffed to a bed and crying out for her mother. Off camera, a maniacal Gates could be heard encouraging the child to dress in high heels and lingerie so she could better please her "new mommy and daddy."

That evidence, taken in tandem with Gates' vaccine fraud, prompted the military to launch a global manhunt for the socially awkward but ruthlessly dangerous nerd.

Sources told RRN that Gates' wife Melinda played a crucial role in his arrest.

"Initially she was reluctant to fully cooperate, because she felt that knowledge of her involvement might jeopardize the fortune she aims to get from the divorce settlement, most of which has not been paid. But JAG has evidence proving that she had knowledge of the child trafficking and told her she'd be charged alongside Bill if she didn't cooperate. It turned out that Bill had been spamming her with enciphered emails only she could decode. He wanted to reconcile. The military used that to its advantage," our source said.

Melinda finally answered him, our source added, and agreed to a meeting. She told Bill to name the time and place. In response, Bill Gates suggested a house he had owned in Myrtle Beach. Although the military had been conducting surveillance on all known Gates-owned properties, the Myrtle Beach house had escaped military notice, because Gates had purchased it under an alias.

When Gates showed up, the Marines were waiting, our source said.

He was taken into custody and is currently being detained at an unknown location pending transportation to Guantanamo Bay, our source added.

Military Hangs Susan Rice

By Michael Baxter @realrawnews.com

The U.S. Navy Judge Advocate General's Corps on Wednesday hanged former National Security Advisor Susan Rice, just a month after a military tribunal at Guantanamo Bay found her guilty of high treason and recommended that she be put to death for crimes committed against the nation and its citizenry.

Asked if she had any last words, a tearful Rice said she had done nothing wrong, that she had only ever followed lawful orders.

Her execution took place without much fanfare, and she died on the same apparatus that was used to execute Hillary Clinton last April. Vice Adm. John G. Hannink ordered the execution detail to conduct the sentence at 9:00 a.m. Rice's neck snapped, and an attending military physician declared her dead.

Vice Adm. John G. Hannink remarked that he took no pleasure in overseeing executions but acknowledged that duty mandated he conduct "unpleasant business."

"These are grim times, and we're called upon to enforce sometimes unpleasant business. We must remember that these people are among the worst society had to offer, and their departure from this world does make the earth a better place and give us a glint of hope for the future," Vice Adm. Hannink told the small assembly who had gathered to watch Rice hang by the neck until dead.

A source involved in the military's Deep State purge told Real Raw News that rice spent her last few days in captivity in tears, a sharp departure from the stoic silence she displayed at her time of arrest and during her military tribunal.

"She was in some state those last four or five days. She cowered in a corner of her cell with her knees drawn up to chest, crying that she was innocent. She begged the guards who brought her meals to let her go—like they could have done anything. I think she was hoping her Deep State allies would spring her, but in the end, she got what she deserved," our source said.

Rice had had numerous opportunities to avoid the hangman's noose. The military had hoped Rice would supply incriminating information on her former boss, Barack Hussein Obama, who the military believes is still masterminding the Deep State's efforts to enslave law-abiding American patriots.

"Obama's hold on these people is remarkable," our source said. "Rice wouldn't give him up. Podesta wouldn't give him up. The Clintons wouldn't give him up. But that's not stopping JAG from pursuing its case against him, and it's only a matter of time before Obama shares a similar fate," our source said.

altruistic, but what is it?

Why would two huge foundations that have in the past year played a central role in controlling the daily behavior of most of the global population invest in a for-profit medical technology firm?

The statement explains:

"The transaction is important in that it transitions a world-class for-profit company into a social enterprise and allows it to entirely reinvest its profits in pursuing these goals. This transformation will give it the ability to address gaps in the provision of global diagnostics in low-income communities and regions that profit-focused business has failed to address."

So everyone benefits, but who profits from this arrangement that appears to be part of the ongoing politicization of healthcare worldwide? And is it good or bad for everyone's health?

Being aligned with these two billionaires is important for bottom lines, most major corporations and even conservative media organizations seem to believe. As for medical benefits being forced on the global population, we are invited to simply have faith in the statement by the Global Access Health:

"The group has financed the acquisition of Mologic Ltd, a world-leading innovator in the development of lateral flow and rapid diagnostic technologies including tests that can help combat tropical diseases such as dengue, bilharzia, and river blindness, as well as for COVID-19," the statement says.

The Epoch Times noted in a July 20 report that Mologic was "founded about two decades ago by the father-and-son team of Mark and Paul Davis. They had previously worked with Gates's foundation, establishing the Advanced Rapid Diagnostics in 2016. Paul Davis is also known for creating the Clearblue pregnancy test in 1988, which, according to the company, is the first application of lateral flow technology."

The precise financial benefit to Mark Davis was not disclosed but he took this opportunity to condemn himself and other capitalists who still have time to repent and seek socialist salvation via Gates and Soros:

"Mologic's transition into a social enterprise is a deliberate, logical and natural step for a company focused on delivering affordable diagnostics and biotechnology to places that have been left underserved by the relentless pursuit of profiteering. With the support of our shareholders, donors and partners we have come a long way; we believe we have the people and the skills required for the challenges and opportunities ahead. And we hope this unique transaction will be an example for others to follow."

Soros's previous Open Society funding efforts have been aimed at "building the capacity of community-based organizations to catalyze political engagement throughout the year and not solely around elections." They feature coordination "with our anchor and core grantees, Democracy Alliance partners and other donors, and field leaders, such as Planned Parenthood, progressive labor, and other allies."

Soros has been criticized in the United States for providing funding to leftist prosecutors and district attorneys, including controversial St. Louis Circuit Attorney Kim Gardner and Los Angeles District Attorney George Gascon. Soros donated more than $2 million to Gascon's campaign.

Other left-wing prosecutors he's provided funding to include Chicago District Attorney Kim Foxx, Philadelphia District Attorney Larry Krasner, and Baltimore City state's attorney Marilyn Mosby.

Gates earlier this month announced that his wife, Melinda, will resign from their foundation in two years if they can't work together amid their divorce.

COVID-era Catholics should look to the English confessors and martyrs for guidance

By LifeSiteNews

ENGLAND (The Catholic Corner) — The world appears to be degenerating at an ever-increasing pace. Society seems to be stumbling ever more closely towards that totalitarianism which, previously, we thought only existed in history books or dystopian novels. Where do we, as Catholics, look for guidance? For a precedent? Where do we take our compass bearing from?

Quite frankly, we are spoilt for choice. We have innumerable options from the early Christians to the Cristeros, through to modern day Christians facing very real persecution in the Middle East. In these examples, although there be some nuance, the line between right and wrong, good and evil, spiritual fight or flight, was and is relatively clear. But there is one era of history very similar to our own. An era where confusion abounded; where things changed from one day to the next; where insidious government edicts pushed the boundaries of what a man might do and what a man should do. This period was the English Reformation.

The English Reformation came at the crest of the wave that was the Renaissance. It came in a pre-smartphone world when, it could be argued, the academy was somewhat less partial and partisan than today. At the dawn of the Reformation, it was the norm for the students of the University of Oxford to be well versed in multiple languages, ancient Greek, Latin, and the Classics in their early teens. Yet it all came crumbling down at breakneck speed.

We will not dwell on how it happened. Many fine literary works have been written on the subject. If you are reading this article, it is likely you know something of Henry VIII, Elizabeth, Regnans in Excelsis and Tyburn. Let us focus instead upon the parallels that might be drawn between that turbulent period and our own.

The parallels are striking: the state-mandated church closures, government lockdowns and quarantines today echo the state-mandated and compulsory Protestant liturgy in Elizabethan England. It is interesting to note that the same penalty for non-compliance was applied then, as now: heavy fines. Next, consider the equally applicable phenomenon of an agitated populace, incited by fear, political instability, and incessant changes to draconian rules – an environment in which the citizen is actively encouraged to be ever vigilant and denounce his neighbour to the authorities, either to advance his own interests or to save his own skin. A further parallel is that of a society on edge, tense, a breakdown of trust in the authorities, not least, in Church authorities.

Hilaire Belloc argues that just enough of the English aristocracy accepted the Reformation in exchange for material advantage (the monastic lands that some still hold to this day). If one compares this with certain political and celebrity figures today, the question should arise – what do they stand to gain for pushing this agenda? If it is true that all that is necessary for the triumph of evil, is that good men do nothing, then the Reformation hung on a knife edge. How much more is this applicable today?

In Reformation times, almost all of the English clerical hierarchy capitulated, with some notable exceptions such as St. John Fisher. Today is not dissimilar. While, undoubtedly, there are some lonely heroes, there is almost universal capitulation, as much by leading politicians as by captains of industry, to the Covid tyranny which is strangling western civilisation. And as for the Church hierarchy, the majority make their Reformation counterparts look like Carolingian warriors.

We are, many of us, familiar with the stories of the great saints and their exploits of that period; of Saint Margaret Clitheroe and the Shambles, of Campion's Brag, of Fr. John Gerard's thrilling escape from the Tower of London and of the Te Deums sang and masses celebrated in London's Marshalsea prison – bursting with recusants. But let us also remember with pride that this turmoil of yesteryear, which we can easily identify with in our own age, triggered The Pilgrimage of Grace and The Western Rising, also known as the Prayer Book Rebellion, early on in the story.

Like the martyrs of the Vendée that followed them two and a half centuries later, these valiant attempts were overwhelmingly made up of common men, inspired by common sense and a common love of the Catholic Faith. In human terms, they were doomed to failure, but God is not mocked. The blood of the martyrs is the seed of the Church. England was almost immediately rewarded with an army of subsequent saints who kept the Faith alive, allowed it to survive and, later, flourish.

It remains to be seen how things will play out in our own times. What is clear is that the qualities that saw the ordinary man and woman through in Reformation England are the same qualities that will see us through now: an uncompromising spirituality, heroic virtue and common sense. We are not all called to be a Margaret Clitheroe, a Thomas More or an Edmund Campion, but we must ensure that we are at least amongst that class of extraordinary ordinary Catholics that swept out of the North in the Pilgrimage of Grace, or stormed out of Cornwall to their eternal reward in the Western Rising.

took the nation by storm last year when she appeared at the Republican National Convention in full religious habit to give a stirring pro-life address while wielding her weapon: the rosary.

Now Byrne's message for America is to pray and remain in a state of grace in the face of experimental COVID-19 vaccine mandates and a government she fears is headed toward communism.

"This battle is not between the right and the left, it's not between conservatives and liberals or Republicans and Democrats," the retired Army colonel, who spoke at today's "Stop the Shot" conference, told LifeSiteNews in an exclusive interview.

She added that "this is a battle between Our Lord and the devil," and warned that everyone must choose a side.

After having earned her M.D. from Georgetown University and serving as an officer with the U.S. Army Medical Corps, Byrne fulfilled her religious vocation by becoming a sister with the Little Workers of the Sacred Hearts in Washington, D.C.

Sister Byrne holds a board certification in family medicine and general surgery and is a fellow of the American College of Surgeons. She currently serves as the medical director of the Little Workers' Physical Therapy and Eye Clinic and is a volunteer surgeon for the Catholic Charities Medical Clinic in the Mount Pleasant neighborhood of D.C.

Byrne, whose military service took her to Korea and Egypt's Sinai Peninsula, and who worked as a missionary surgeon in Haiti, Sudan, Kenya, and Iraq, told LifeSite that "common sense" preventive measures and therapeutic drugs can sharply reduce hospitalizations and deaths for patients with COVID-19.

"If we treat them early – early is the ticket – with ivermectin and hydroxychloroquine," Byrne said, "80% of the people will not have to go to the hospital."

But Byrne lamented that the treatments have been largely ignored in favor of experimental "vaccines" which have become increasingly mandated.

"That's the shame of it all, that because this is an emergency mandate of vaccination, they're trying to push it on everybody," Byrne said, noting that emergency vaccination would only be necessary if there were a lack of effective therapeutics.

"We have therapy, and it's proven therapy, and the powers-that-be, the government leaders here in the states, are ignoring this data."

Byrne said that at the start of the pandemic she became aware that people were being sent home after getting a positive COVID-19 test without being directed to safe and effective drugs to prevent serious illness.

"As things started to unfold people started to reach out to me and tell me they were sick. I said, 'well, are you on any treatment?'"

When her patients said they were not taking any treatments, Byrne said she "got them started."

"I just said, 'let's get going on this,'" she said. "So we just sort of take the bull by the horns, and if a patient comes in and we have a therapy, we give it to them."

But Byrne, whose medical clout includes having provided emergency care to war-torn Kurdistan with the Global Surgical and Medical Support Group, a non-profit founded to bring medical care to conflict zones across the world, has not been able to say much about her successes.

Despite her experience with the efficacy of common, safe therapeutics, Byrne told LifeSite that COVID patients treated at her clinic must be assisted "on the side without making a lot of noise about it."

She mentioned that hydroxychloroquine, a safe drug routinely used as a prophylaxis for malaria and found useful for early treatment of COVID-19, has been restricted by some government leaders like New York's Gov. Andrew Cuomo.

According to Byrne, "These governmental officials are making medical decisions [for] people, not allowing them to make their own decision about hydroxychloroquine, which is such a benign drug."

When the treatments provided by Byrne and her fellow doctors and nurses have made patients well, Byrne said, "We just smiled when we saw the person getting better."

With consistent success with early treatment using safe and effective drugs, Byrne said the focus on experimental COVID-19 "vaccines," developed or tested using aborted fetal tissue, to the exclusion of proven therapeutics, has "a bit of a diabolic flavor to it."

Describing the unprecedented power seized by unelected government officials during the pandemic, Byrne suggested COVID-19 shots are being mandated for "total control."

"They want to force an experimental compound that we really don't know the long-term effects [of]. Then they want to, on top of that, make sure everyone has a [vaccine] passport," she said. "So, it's total control of a populace. And that's communism. We're headed that way."

Byrne, whose military service saw her tending to the medical needs of people living under harsh and totalitarian regimes, described the inherent atheism of communistic and socialistic systems, saying "those people hate God, because the people are not subservient to the government, they're subservient to God. So this is competition."

"Christians, people of good will, faithful people, who love God, love Jesus, and want to just do all for Him, and would even die for Him, [are] a threat to communistic, socialistic regimes," she said.

Byrne suggested that the push to impose COVID-19 shots and mandatory proof of vaccination is related to an inversion of traditional morality that has beset the world.

"They're all interrelated," Byrne said. "It's not only this whole thing with the vaccine mandate but it's also the desecration of the most Blessed Sacrament, the Eucharist. And just even allowing people who are in a mortal state of sin to receive our Lord. And this would encompass people who are in a public arena who are promoting abortions, or euthanasia, or transgenderism."

"It's a web," Byrne continued. "They're not separate issues. These are diabolic concepts or issues that are affecting us at every level, and we have to pray. That's the only way we're going to fight all these issues."

Byrne urged everyone, particularly those of faith, to resist fear.

"There's a lot of people who are afraid out there. And we just have to assure them, to tell them that God is there with them and not to be afraid," she said. "But we can't give what we don't have."

"Our mission is to love Christ and to be with him, and we have to bring as many as we can with us," she explained.

Sister Byrne said everyone must partake of the sacraments and be in a state of grace. She cited St. Joan of Arc, saying that when her persecutors asked her whether she was in the state of grace, "her answer was just a prayer: 'Lord if I'm in the state of grace please keep me there, if I'm not please put me there.'"

Finally Byrne warned that people must recognize the high stakes of the current moral and political situation in the U.S., particularly with regard to forced COVID-19 shots.

"If we are all forced to take an experimental vaccine – that has known high risk side [effects] for a disease that has low mortality – in which many religious and medical exemptions are being refused," Byrne said, "we have lost what is most precious to all Americans, and that is our religious freedom."

University Admits Harvesting Kidneys From Unborn Babies While Their Hearts are Still Beating

By Micaiah Bilger

The University of Pittsburgh may have inadvertently provided more evidence this week that aborted babies may be being born alive and left to die so that their organs may be used for scientific research, according to the Center for Medical Progress.

As LifeNews.com has extensively reported, earlier this week, Judicial Watch and the Center for Medical Progress exposed evidence of babies potentially being born alive in abortions and other disturbing practices in documents they obtained from a Freedom of Information Act request to the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services.

The documents show that the federal government gave the University of Pittsburgh at least $2.7 million in federal tax dollars over the past five years to become a "tissue hub" for aborted baby body parts for scientific research.

On Wednesday, a University of Pittsburgh spokesperson defended its practices in an interview with Fox News. However, the Center for Medical Progress said the university's statements confirm that aborted babies' hearts still are beating while their kidneys are harvested for scientific research.

"Pitt is now admitting to the news media that the aborted babies are still alive at the time their kidneys are cut out for [National Institutes of Health] grant money," said David Daleiden, founder and president of the Center for Medical Progress.

Daleiden continued: "Pitt's grant application for GUDMAP advertised this to the federal government and that labor induction abortions, where the baby is pushed out of the mother whole, would be 'used to obtain the tissue.' The plain meaning of the GUDMAP grant application, and the University of Pittsburgh's statement explaining it, is that Pitt and the Planned Parenthood abortion providers responsible for its 'research' abortions are allowing babies, some of the age of viability, to be delivered alive, and then killing them by cutting their kidneys out."

The basis for this came from a statement university spokesman David Seldin made to Fox News about "ischemia time," which he said "refers to the time after the tissue collection procedure."

The Center for Medical Progress explained:

Becerra and Biden Betray Medical Professionals Being Forced to Assist in Abortions

By Roger Severino

"Don't hate me." According to a lawsuit filed by the Department of Justice last year, that is what an abortionist at the University of Vermont Medical Center (UVMMC) said to a nurse before she forced her to assist in the termination of a child's life on pain of losing her job and potentially her license if she refused. The nurse in the case had informed her bosses well beforehand that she could not participate in abortion because of her religious and moral convictions. Her right to such a demurrer is protected by federal law, known as the Church Amendments, which Congress passed unanimously in direct response to Roe v. Wade. The facts were stunning in their clarity, the victim was extremely credible and sympathetic, and the violator remained entirely callous and unrepentant. The UVMMC matter was the most open and shut conscience case in over a decade. I say was, because on Friday, the DOJ quietly, and voluntarily, dismissed the case. No admission of guilt, no injunction, no corrective action, no settlement, no nothing. Worse yet, because the

New Peer-Reviewed Study Debunks Myth of Abortion as "Normative" for Mothers

By Charlotte Lozier Institute

Washington, D.C. – A new peer-reviewed study of nearly eight million pregnancies debunks the abortion industry narrative that abortion is a normative experience for mothers, finding that mothers with both births and abortions are rare.

The new study, authored by Dr. James Studnicki and a team of Charlotte Lozier Institute (CLI) scholars, revealed that out of nearly five million Medicaid-enrolled women with at least one pregnancy, less than 6% had both births and abortions. Researchers also found that women in the study population almost never used abortion as a tool to space their children.

CLI President Charles A. "Chuck" Donovan said:

"The abortion industry wants America to believe that abortion is a normal experience for mothers. They want to make it acceptable to target vulnerable women and children by citing estimates and surveys conducted at abortion centers to support the narrative that 'everybody is doing it.' This new peer-reviewed research proves those narratives simply aren't true.

"What Dr. Studnicki and his team have done is truly remarkable. This peer-reviewed

The Pro-Life Movement Chooses the Hard Right Over the Easy Wrong

By Tom Cotton

Many of us have a story about how we got involved in the pro-life movement. Perhaps it was a wise mentor or preacher. Perhaps it was the sight of that first ultrasound. Or perhaps it was the birth of a precious child, who gave new meaning to your life in a thousand different ways.

I've been pro-life for as long as I can remember, but becoming a parent affirmed my pro-life convictions and made them personal. I suspect most parents can relate.

When my wife, Anna, was pregnant with our second son, she developed a condition that required the doctors to induce her early, at 37 weeks. The birth and the labor went well. And our son seemed fine at first. After we held him for a few minutes, the nurses took him away for routine checks. But then the doctor came and told us that our son was struggling to breathe. And later that night, the doctor came back and said he'd taken a turn for the worse and that they were going to have to intubate him and put him in a pressurized bubble. We would not be able to see him or hold him as he struggled for life.

So we prayed, and we asked God to protect our son and his doctors and his nurses. He still didn't have a name at that time. As we waited, we went through our list of possible names, one of which was Daniel. I re-read the story of Daniel in the lion's den to my wife. And on the spot, she said, "his name is Daniel."

Our Daniel went through his own lion's den over the next few days, with some ups and downs, but he ultimately prevailed. And after a few days, we were able to go into the NICU and see him, and hold him, and nurse him.

Around us were many families and many babies, some born much earlier than Daniel and facing a much longer struggle. Adorning the walls in that NICU were posters showing a bright future ahead, with images of young children and teenagers running and playing and notes that indicated how prematurely they were born and how small they were at birth.

We have seen those brighter days with Daniel since we left the NICU four and a half years ago. We have also seen them at the reunion of that NICU, with all the babies who have passed through those doors. All those little—and not so little—kids were at one point vulnerable preemies. Many could not have survived without the grace of God and the miracles of modern science. Yet many of those young children would have had no recognition and no protection under our laws until the moment of their premature birth.

And that is wrong. Every life, born and unborn, is worthy of protection. Every child is made in the image of God, and the most vulnerable especially deserve the fullest love and every effort to protect them.

The unborn have been an endangered group in our society ever since seven justices discovered a so-called "right" to abortion in our Constitution in 1973. But now we're living in an especially perilous time. Not only is abortion-on-demand still the law of the land, but our opponents are advancing on several fronts, emboldened by the most pro-abortion White House in American history.

Meanwhile, outside the realm of politics, pro-lifers must also contend with what Pope

VOICE OF JERUSALEM

Biden's bungled response on the Israeli-Palestinian conflict

By Shibley Telhami

No one expected President Joe Biden to make the Israeli-Palestinian conflict a priority of his administration. He has had his hands full with critical priorities, including the coronavirus pandemic, the economy, and racial justice. Even on the Middle East, his priority has been to negotiate a return to the Iran nuclear deal, which Israel opposed, thus inclining him to forego a new front with Israel over Palestine, especially as the prospects of peace seemed remote.

But once the latest confrontation between Israelis and Palestinians erupted in April, few expected what was to come from the Biden administration: resistance to condemn even the clearest violation of international law and human rights by Israel — such as the plans to evict Palestinians from their homes in a Jerusalem neighborhood — even before the condemnable Hamas rockets began flying into Israel. In the process, Biden's image, his agenda to lead on human rights and international law, and his support from key Democratic constituents at home have been badly damaged.

To put this in perspective, George W. Bush, who was considered a strong pro-Israel president, condemned Israel for " heavy-handed" action in 2002, when it launched a Gaza strike that targeted a Hamas leader, but also killed 14 others, including children; this came at a time when Hamas was carrying out horrific suicide bombings that killed many more Israelis than the rockets fired on Israel in the past week. In contrast, Biden, who aspires to be a " beacon for the globe," couldn't bring himself to condemn planned Israeli evictions of Palestinians from their Jerusalem homes, an act that the United Nations said could constitute a war crime, or criticize Israeli bombings that killed more than 200 Palestinians, including scores of children, and brought down many high-rise buildings, including one housing the Associated Press and other media outlets.

The net result is that Biden has badly damaged his credibility. But that's only part of the story. The United States is not a bystander in Israeli-Palestinian conflict; it is part and parcel of the overwhelming asymmetry of power favoring Israel. When the United States does nothing, it is further implicated in what Israel does, which is directly enabled by decades of American support.

When thinking about U.S. clout with Israel, most analysts, and an increasing number of critics within the halls of Congress, focus on the quantity of financial aid to Israel, now amounting to $3.8 billion a year, making Israel the largest cumulative recipient of U.S. assistance since World War II. That's a lot, but that's not what enables Israel the most. Three other American gifts are more central to Israeli superiority.

The first is shielding Israel at the United Nations, by discouraging, often vetoing, U.N. action against Israeli occupation. It is fair to say, that this shielding of Israel is one important reason that Israel has been able to maintain its 54-year-occupation of Palestinian territory. Even in this crisis, we saw elements of this as Biden moved to prevent even U.N. Security Council statements calling for a cease-fire.

Second, a principal reason that Israel maintains military superiority, not only in relation to occupied Palestinian residents of occupied land, but in relation to any other regional power, is that it has been U.S. policy to uniquely provide Israel with qualitative military edge to maintain its supremacy.

A third reason for the imbalance of power is that the United States has used its clout and resources with Arab countries to make deals with Israel, without serious concessions on Palestine, from the

Camp David Accords to the

Abraham Accords — taking key Arab states out of the equation of Israel's confrontation with the Palestinians.

If an American president cannot leverage this unprecedented support to advance the values he professes to hold dear, what hope is there for succeeding anywhere else?

At home, Biden has also badly misread his own Democratic constituency, taking an approach that's been a throwback to another era of Democratic culture, seemingly disconnected from the dramatic shift that has taken hold in Democrats' attitudes on Israel/Palestine.

Contrary to prevailing views, this shift is not only among progressives; it's far more pervasive.

A recent Gallup poll, for example, showed that 53% of Democrats supported putting more pressure on the Israelis to advance peace, "up from 43% in 2018 and no more than 38% in the decade before that, marking a substantive change in Democrats' perspective on U.S. policy." Our own University of Maryland polls have for years have shown that most

Democrats support applying sanctions or even more serious measures on Israel over its settlement policy in the West Bank. Two-thirds of Democrats (and 60% overall) say their congressional representatives are leaning toward Israel more than they are (when we exclude those who say they don't know). Overwhelmingly,

78% of Democrats favor a democratic Israel, even if it would no longer be a Jewish state, over a Jewish state without full equality for all its citizens. These trends have been solidified by the Democrats' fear of Trumpism and threats to democracy and social justice that helped mobilize them in the 2020 election.

In not pushing to arrange for an earlier cease-fire, more Israelis, and many more Palestinians ( the ratio of dead has been 1:20) have been killed, thousands of Palestinians made homeless, and a besieged, impoverished, occupied population is thrown into even more misery.

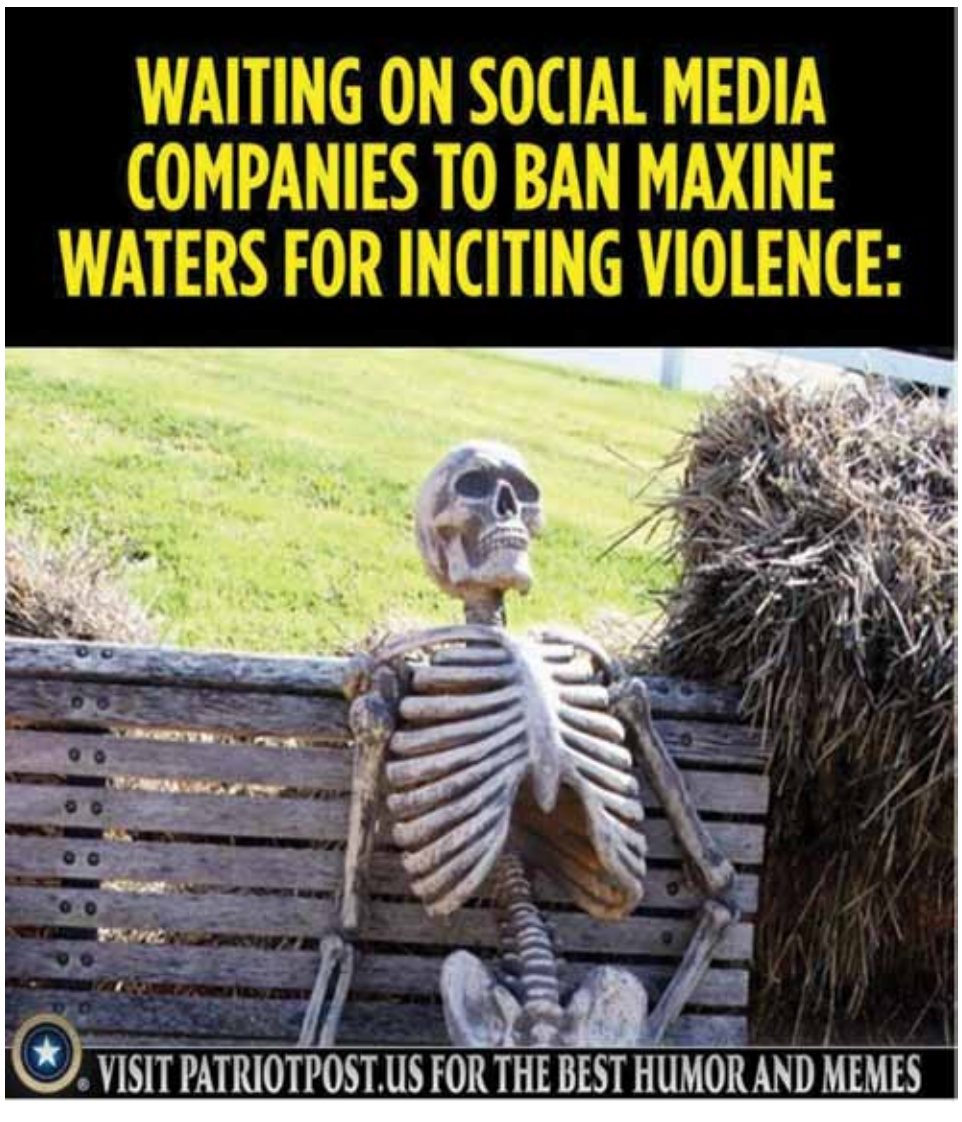
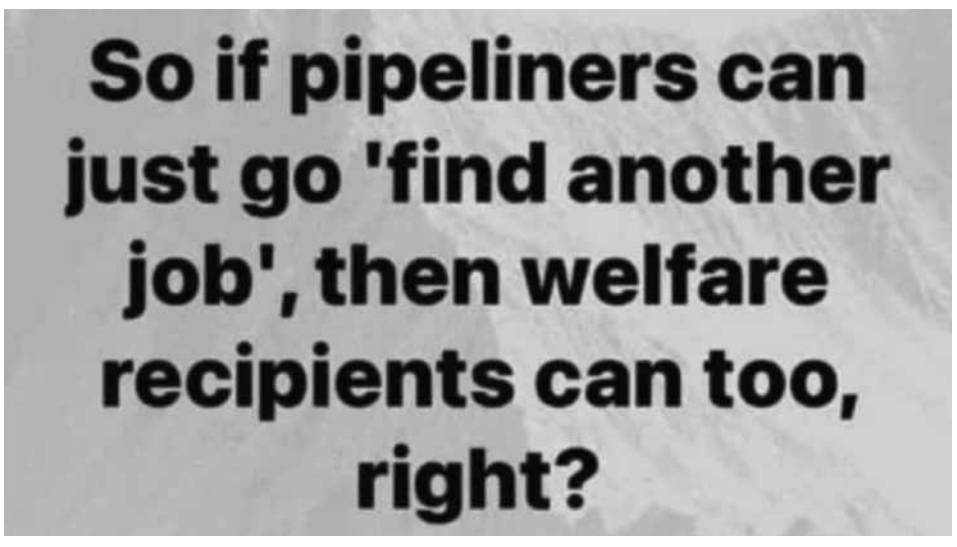
Neither Israel nor Hamas wants a bigger war, and neither has a military solution; this round will likely end soon, even as each wants to reach a point of claiming "victory." Palestinians and Israelis will go back to what was an abhorrent status quo, bad for both sides, but overwhelmingly bad for the Palestinians who, after 54 years, remain under intolerable conditions of occupation. And Biden will turn his attention farther away — until the next inevitable round of killing and destruction.

But make no mistake, Biden's bungling of this crisis will impact the way he is seen, at home and abroad.





Wisconsin Patriots Rally For a Forensic Audit

By Steve Welcenbach

At noon on a sunny, hot Wisconsin summer day, several hundred Patriots gathered in the State Capitol square to show their support for demanding a complete forensic audit of the November 2020 Presidential election. A gigantic trove of data and documents accumulated since the November election along with blatant violations of election law prior to and on election day indicate President Donald Trump won Wisconsin by an overwhelming margin. Most Wisconsin conservatives believe the Left stole the 2018 governor and attorney general elections and possibly other races using the same methodology.

Former Milwaukee County Sheriff David Clarke, Jr. organized the rally and addressed the gathering, emphasizing personal courage, fighting for liberty and getting involved. Vicki McKenna, the rock star of talk radio, not only promoted the rally on her radio show, but stood shoulder to shoulder with her fellow Wisconsin Patriots and fired up the crowd with her America First rhetoric and a litany of how they stole the election blow by blow.

The political figure most responsible for making the forensic audit a reality, my own State Representative Janel Brandtjen (of whom I am QUITE PROUD) proclaimed to the crowd that the time has finally come to purge this voter fraud scourge from our state.

Elections in Wisconsin need to be fixed and fixed now. But until someone goes to prison for their part in criminal election fraud, nothing will change. That process begins when perpetrators get charged with their crimes. And how will that happen? Only God knows, for no one on the Left will be charged with anything as long as Attorney General Josh Kaul remains in that office. That office must change immediately, maybe by looking into the 2018 election with its own forensic audit?

We don't ask for much. Just the truth. And we're willing to pay whatever the cost to bring it forth.

August 6, 2021

Madison – Today, State Representative Janel Brandtjen (R-Menomonee Falls) announced the issuance of subpoenas for election materials from Milwaukee and Brown counties in furtherance of the Assembly Campaigns and Elections Committee's top-to-bottom investigation of the 2020 Presidential General Election, as directed by the enrolled 2021 Assembly Resolution 15.

"Legislators have been hearing from thousands of disgruntled constituents regarding their concerns with the November 2020 election. From outside money pouring into Democrat-controlled communities, to individuals engaging in questionable activities; from improper guidance given to clerks from the Wisconsin Elections Commission, to clerks illegally prompting voters to declare themselves "indefinitely confined." The list goes on and on.

I understand the Legislative Audit Bureau is conducting an audit, however, many constituents have raised objections to it due to the length of time it has taken and the lack of specifics, as it is open-ended. I also appreciate that the Committee on Assembly Organization has authorized the Speaker to hire legal counsel and employ investigators to assist the Assembly Committee on Campaigns and Elections in investigating the administration of elections in Wisconsin and that additional resources are being provided for that purpose. I sincerely welcome and applaud these efforts, however, the people of Wisconsin demand and deserve a transparent, full, cyber-forensic audit as described in the subpoenas submitted to both Milwaukee and Brown Counties. The clock is ticking as the 2022 elections will commence in just a matter of months.

As the Chair of the Assembly Committee of Campaigns and Elections, I am issuing these subpoenas as the first step towards a full, cyber-forensic audit of tabulators and inspection of the physical ballots from the November 2020 fall election."

Earlier this week, Wisconsin Elections Commission (WEC) officials removed over 205,000 voter registrations from their state election system.

"Wisconsin has just canceled 205,000 voter registrations because they say they could not find the voters," former President Donald Trump said on Saturday.

"Why did they wait until AFTER the election? Would this mean that we would have won Wisconsin? Congratulations," Trump added.
