Free at Last from EPA's Climate Change Regulatory Reign of Terror

By William L. Kovacs

This article is dedicated to Steve Welcenbach and the hundreds of volunteers around the nation who fought for decades against the regulatory reign of terror that EPA and the environmental community aggressively sought to inflict on the U.S. through Climate Change regulation. If we lost the battle, it is unlikely we would remain a free people. Climate change is about controlling society, not protecting the environment. This article highlights how a fight that seemed impossible to win, was made winnable by the arrogant overreach of our opponents, a corporate leader's lack of courage, a president who kept his word and appointed conservative justices, and a small, poor, rural state that slew the regulatory monster.

On June 30, 2022, the U.S. Supreme Court ended twenty years of efforts by the Environmental Protection Agency ("EPA") and environmental groups, (jointly "the environmental community") to use the vague language in numerous environmental laws to regulate almost every aspect of life in the United States. Upon reading the U.S. Supreme Court's groundbreaking opinion in West Virginia vs Environmental Protection Agency ("West Virginia case"), I could only think of the words of Martin Luther King, "Free at last, thank God Almighty, we are free at last" from the environmental community's reign of regulatory terror.

The West Virginia case involved EPA's use of the "vague language of a long-extant, but rarely used, statute" as authority to regulate major economic and political issues without congressional authorization. Specifically, EPA was relying on section 111 of the Clean Air Act ("CAA") to impose a cap-and-trade scheme for carbon emissions on the utility industry. The Supreme Court could have easily resolved the

Billionaire climate elites have their own rules

Billionaire climate scolds with mansions, private jets want to tell rest of us how to live

By Paul Dreissen

Progressives have long wanted to tax unrealized gains from billionaires' stocks, bonds, land holdings, homes, artwork, cars, yachts and other property. As appealing as this sounds, the scheme would be vastly complicated and unworkable. In the absence of sales, who would evaluate current values – and how?

But the frustrations we "commoners" have with the ultra-rich are understandable – especially when they lecture us about eating less "climate-altering" beef, avoiding $5.00 gasoline by buying $60,000 electric vehicles, and bankrolling "experts" who say we should live in 650-square-foot apartments.

So it's entertaining when some

Being BlackRocked = Being Cancelled by a Global Public Private Partnership

By Kathleen Marquardt

While most of us thought that we had a government of the people, by the people, for the people, we do not and have not had one for many decades. The transformation has been in the works for over 100 years, but the final weapon to take us to a one-world government was the two-part President's Council on Sustainable Development/National Partnership for Reinventing Government. The first part embedded Agenda 21 into even the most minor areas of government — from federal to Podunkville. The second, while we heard even less about it, is the dangerous "focus on leading a fundamental culture change in the government", that transfers(ed) power from Congress to the bureaucracy; from representatives of the people to unelected bodies (and thus we have no ability to oust them) who "ultimately control international finance, all corporate & business activity,

Abp. Viganò: Roe decision is a 'historic opportunity' to defend the 'sanctity of human life'

By Lifesitenews.com

On June 24, the Supreme Court of the United States of America, overturning the 1973 Roe v. Wade decision, healed a constitutional vulnus [wound] and at the same time restored sovereignty to the individual states after almost fifty years.

The decision of the Supreme Court did not overrule the "right to abortion" – as the mainstream narrative claims – but rather it overturned abortion's "obligatory legalization in all of the States," returning the power to decide about the "profound moral question of abortion" to "the

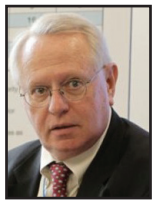
Federal Law Protects Government Disinformation, Lies & Propaganda



By Williams Kovacs

The public outcry forced the Department of Homeland Security ("DHS") on May 18, 2022, to "pause" its "Disinformation Governance Board" ("DGB"). The pause, unfortunately, was a very short-lived victory for free speech. On June 16, 2022, the Biden administration reconstituted the DGB as a "Disinformation Task Force," to be led by Vice President Harris. Due to the almost instantaneous timing of the new task force, the "pause" was merely a temporary retreat by the federal government to avoid the ridicule of its efforts to enhance its power to disinform, lie and spew propaganda.

Fifty-six percent of Americans do not trust their government much or at all, while 83% believe the U.S. is going in the wrong direction. Fortunately, Americans are more competent than their government.

When the DHS announced the pause, it did not apologize for a stupid, "1984" type idea or for appointing a director that is the queen of disinformation.

Clarence Thomas, Joseph Biden: Stark Contrasts in Character

By Larry Bell

Recently decrying the Supreme Court's decision to overturn Roe v. Wade and rebuking Justice Clarence Thomas for the "tragic error," President Biden himself reversed his own 1982 position when he cast a Senate vote to do exactly the same — a Senate Judiciary Committee constitutional amendment proposal to allow individual states to determine abortion rights.

Biden's harsh criticism of Justice Thomas bears witness to dramatic personal and career contrasts between the two men that warrant long-neglected public attention.

Clarence Thomas was born in the tiny coastal town of Pin Point, Georgia, on June 23, 1948 where he lived in a one-room shack with dirt floors and no plumbing. His father walked out when he was 2 years old, and at the age of 7 he and his younger brother were sent to live with their grandparents in Savannah.

Steve's Say . . .

With God's Help, Patriots are Winning All Across the World

For many in America and around the world, they see themselves in the midst of a nightmare with no way out. They realize the United States presidency, stolen in the election of 2020 by foreign actors and Deep State traitors, must be brought to and end - and fast - before America gets completely destroyed, and the rest of the world with it.

It looks bad. Really bad. But not so fast.

A whole string of unbelievably significant and unthinkable victories for freedom and the rule of law occurred since our June edition. Roe v. Wade overturned, the true intent of the second amendment upheld and the essential reversal of the CO2 endangerment finding which now removes a huge portion of the power the Feds grabbed from the states over the past 120 years. See Bill Kovacs front page article article for details and his analysis.

But wait. There's more. Lots more.

The Georgia Guidestones, a monument which mysteriously appeared in 1980 with a satanic message of planetary doom, suddenly blew up at around 4 AM on July 6th, destroying about a quarter of the monument. And strangely, by the end of the day, the some Georgian authority dismantled the remainder of the monument. Very weird that a "crime scene" be completely wiped out before any investigation could be conducted.

One truth news source characterized this monument in their report:

https://welovetrump.com/2022/07/09/georgia-guidestones-destroyed-by-bomb-earthquake-lightning-or-god-watch-the-exclusive-video-here/

By now, I'm sure you've heard that the Satanic Georgia Guidestones have been totally and utterly destroyed and demolished.

We don't advocate for violence or destruction of property here at WeLoveTrump, but we're not shedding any tears that these evil, Satanic monuments are gone!

How about you?

Now, in case you are wondering what the big deal is or why we're so happy, you can READ THE FULL DETAILS HERE, but here's just the tip of the iceberg…

Commandment #1 on the Stones read: "Maintain humanity at 500 Million People."

Now if you're not paying attention, maybe you gloss over that and don't realize the importance, but here's the deal: there are about 8 BILLION (with a B) people on the Earth today.

In other words, 94% of the world population needs to, ummmm, "go away".

Now does the jab make sense?

Now does the planned-demic make sense?

Now do all the food production facility fires make sense?

Now does the runaway inflation make sense?

As the Flyover Conservatives put it, that would be like walking into a room of 100 people and saying 94 of you need to die right now.

How do you think that would be received?

The Flyover Conservatives, David and Stacy Whited, invited the world's most knowledgable Georgia Guidestones expert Sheila Holm on their show to find out the real cause of the destruction. Her conclusion? Lightning, the Hand of God. She reports that aerial video footage showed a storm passed by and the lightning strike occurred.

And strangely, the very next day:

Then two days later, a raging inferno engulfed areas of Rome near the Vatican. No cause or comprehensive report on damage seems to be available yet but the fire engulfed the area around the Vatican obelisk.

The Georgia Guidestones wrote into stone the tenets and plans of the New World Order, ala the 10 commandments of the Bible. Their mockery of the Almighty One could not be put more publicly on display. The satanic origin of the obelisk certainly makes one wonder which one God might target next.

Meanwhile, the farmers in Holland and Germany continue to protest the economic insanity and idiotic laws being put forth on fertilizer. Those governments will not be around much longer. Thirty-some members of Boris Johnson's cabinet resigned leading to his commitment to be replaced by September. The Government in Sri Lanka is history, Argentina undergoing convulsive political changes and street buzz regarding Justin Castro Trudeau say his days as Canadian PM will soon end. Lots of Deep Staters going down all over the world.

The reported assassination of former Japanese Prime Minister Shinzo Abe certainly plays into the scene, how exactly no one really knows at this time. Trump had nice things to say about him, though his past political ties show some disturbing alliances.

The MSM continues the Ukraine lie and the criminal regime in Washington continues to use that pretense to continue to steal the money of taxpaying Americans. The Russians took out the bioweapons Fauci and his crews created (thank you very much) and have the Azov Nazis on the run. Putin has earned our gratitude.

Since the Russians backed the Ruble with gold, more and more countries established gold backed currencies, joining the BRICS nations in asset-backed trade which cannot be manipulated by a central banking cabal issuing fiat money. Our current monetary system will not last much longer. Be ready for a convulsive change.

The Deep State cannot escape the bed they've made. Their commitment to The Great Reset, The Green New Deal, Depopulation and One World Totalitarian government aka New World Order leaves them no choice but to fight with everything until the bitter end. This evil criminal plan to enslave humanity they initiated passed the point of no return long ago. They cannot stop it. And the World Alliance of Patriots knew all along what they were going to do and had countermeasures ready for all of it. Many cannot see this happening because of the continual media barrage of falsehoods and propaganda.

Reporting monstrous positive developments for free people feels terrific. We now know that the US Supreme Court somehow freed itself from the cabal stranglehold and some lesser courts seemed to follow such as in Wisconsin. The rule of law and re-establishment of appropriate government functions lays the groundwork for getting America's house in order.

Yet the Deep State and cabal players will not go quietly into the night. They continue to destroy food sources and supply chains to inflict pain and suffering upon the population of not only America but the world. Inflation, artificially high energy prices and bogus pandemic claims pushed by MSM and political actors will inevitably result in an economic crash. We can't escape this fate. But we will NEVER allow them to replace their failed fiat currency system with The Great Reset.

That's our job. We have lots of allies and we've been given all the intelligence we need to brace for what's ahead. And God just sent the message to us all that the Devil's death party he planned for humanity is cancelled.

If we return to God with all of our heart, as sincere individuals asking for His grace, courage and blessing, He will not only provide it to us and our families but to America and the world as well.

Stay strong, stay focused and stay in prayer. God is with us.

Our Vision

We aspire to a world in which people, made in the image of God, reconciled to Him by Jesus Christ, and reflecting God's own creativity, work together to enhance the fruitfulness, beauty, and safety of the Earth, enabling more and more of our neighbors to enjoy good health, long life, freedom, justice, and spiritual and material abundance, for the glory of God and the good of our fellow man, thus fulfilling the two Great Commandments to love God and love our neighbor.

Our Mission

We seek to magnify the glory of God in creation, the wisdom of His truth in environmental stewardship, the kindness of His mercy in lifting the needy out of poverty, and the wonders of His grace in the gospel of Jesus Christ.

In Pandering to the Green Left, Biden Is Underwriting China's Genocide of Uyghurs

By Robert Bryce

Last June, the Biden administration was so concerned about China's use of Uyghur Muslim slave labor to produce the polysilicon needed for solar panels that it imposed bans on imports of that product from some Chinese manufacturers.

But that was last year before the domestic solar industry went into free fall due to a Commerce Department investigation into allegations of dumping that effectively halted the import of solar panels from four southeast Asia countries that were accused of circumventing tariffs on goods made in China.

On Monday, President Joe Biden reversed course and declared a two-year tariff exemption on solar panels from Cambodia, Malaysia, Thailand, and Vietnam. In doing so, Biden effectively neutered the restrictions that were imposed just 12 months ago.

Biden's move is a gift to China. It's also a signal that his administration is more interested in pandering to the renewable-energy lobby group than it is in taking a courageous stand on human rights or defending existing nuclear plants.

The president made the move by declaring that the solar situation is an emergency. "Immediate action is needed to ensure in the interim that the United States has access to a sufficient supply of solar modules to assist in meeting our electricity generation needs," wrote the White House in a June 6 statement. Biden went on to "declare an emergency to exist with respect to the threats to the availability of sufficient electricity generation capacity to meet expected customer demand."

Missing from that declaration is any mention of China, Xinjiang, Uyghurs, or last year's import restrictions.

This is remarkable because last July, the departments of State, Treasury, Commerce, Homeland Security, Labor, and the Office of the U.S. Trade Representative issued an extraordinary document called "Xinjiang Supply Chain Business Advisory," which found that the Chinese government "continues to carry out genocide and crimes against humanity against Uyghurs and members of other ethnic and religious minority groups in Xinjiang."

The report noted that China "dominates global solar supply chains and mounting evidence indicates that solar products and inputs at nearly every step of the production process, from raw silicon material mining to final solar module assembly, are linked to known or probably forced labor programs." It also found that Chinese solar companies controlled 70 percent of the global supply for solar-grade polysilicon, 45 percent of which was manufactured in Xinjiang.

HAMI, CHINA – AUGUST 22: (CHINA OUT) Construction workers install solar panels at Hami Solar Power Station on August 22, 2011 in Hami, Xinjiang Uyghur Autonomous Region of China. The 20MW Hami Solar Power Station, with total area of 830,000 square meters and total investment of 326 million RMB (about 51 million USD), is the first solar power station in Xinjiang. It will be put into operation in 2012.In a separate report issued last June, the State Department found that in Xinjiang, Chinese authorities "use threats of physical violence, forcible drug intake, physical and sexual abuse, and torture to force detainees to work in adjacent or off-site factories or worksites producing garments, footwear, carpets, yarn, food products, holiday decorations, building materials, extractives, materials for solar power equipment and other renewable energy components."

Let's be clear about what the Biden administration is claiming here with its new emergency act: The solar sector is so important that it requires us to ignore China's genocide against the Uyghurs, along with the industry's near-total reliance on Chinese suppliers for the critical commodities needed to produce solar panels.

It doesn't have to be this way. In another outrageous facet of this story, the Biden administration's gift to China and the solar sector was announced just a few days after the senseless closure of the Palisades Power Plant in Michigan. That 811-megawatt nuclear plant was prematurely shuttered on May 20, the very same day the North American Electric Reliability Corporation issued a report which said the U.S. electric grid doesn't have enough generation capacity and that blackouts are almost certain to occur across the country this summer. The Midwest in particular is facing a capacity shortfall that will lead to a "high risk of energy emergencies during peak summer conditions."

Palisades is located in the heart of the Midwest and is immediately adjacent to the area served by the Midcontinent Independent System Operator, the region that NERC identified as having 3,200 megawatts less generation capacity this summer than it did in 2021.

In April, Michigan Gov. Gretchen Whitmer wrote to Energy Secretary Jennifer Granholm seeking federal help and money to keep the plant open. But since the plant closed, neither Whitmer nor anyone from the Biden administration has said a word about trying to rescue Palisades from the wrecking crew.

It's nothing short of a scandal.

The Many Benefits of Rising Atmospheric CO2 — An Introduction

By Craig D. Idso

Atmospheric carbon dioxide: you can't see, hear, smell or taste it. But it's there—all around us—and it's crucial for life. Composed of one carbon and two oxygen atoms, this simple molecule serves as the primary raw material out of which plants construct their tissues, which in turn provide the materials out of which animals construct theirs. Knowledge of the key life-giving and life-sustaining role played by carbon dioxide, or CO2, is so well established, in fact, that humans—and all the rest of the biosphere—are described in the most basic of terms as carbon-based lifeforms. We simply could not and would not exist without it.

Ironically, far too many demonize and falsely label this important atmospheric trace gas a pollutant. Nothing could be further from the truth. Instead of being shunned like the plague, the ongoing rise in CO2 should be welcomed with open arms.

How do I know this?

During the past three decades of my professional career I have performed countless hours of research, conducted multiple experiments, published a series of professional journal articles, written several books, created videos and feature-length documentaries, and authored thousands of commentary articles exploring the effects of CO2 on the biosphere (much of that work can be found at my CO2 Science website, www.co2science.org). In all those activities I have come to know that, far from being a pollutant, this colorless, odorless, tasteless and invisible gas benefits the biosphere in a multitude of ways. And I want to share that knowledge with you!

To accomplish this objective, over the next several months I will be publishing a series of articles describing several key benefits atmospheric CO2 enrichment provides to both humanity and nature. The articles will explore topics such as the effects of CO2 on plant growth and water use efficiency, a CO2-induced greening of the planet, the monetary benefits of rising CO2 on crop yields, and much, much more. Look for the postings at a rate of about two per month.

Sadly, most of the population remains woefully unaware of the many positive impacts of CO2 on the biosphere. This is no surprise, considering the constant and steady stream of misinformation our society endures from sources dedicated to demeaning and defaming CO2. What is more, world governments, non-governmental organizations, international agencies, societal think tanks, and even respectable scientific organizations attempting to assess the potential consequences of increasing atmospheric CO2 concentrations have spent hundreds of millions of dollars writing and promoting large reports about it.

Yet, these endeavors have failed miserably because they have neglected to evaluate or even acknowledge the manifold real and measurable benefits of the ongoing rise in the air's CO2 content. As a result, many important and positive impacts of atmospheric CO2 enrichment remain underappreciated and largely ignored in the debate over what to do, or not do, about anthropogenic CO2 emissions. And that omission does not bode well for policy decisions.

I hope you will join me on this informative journey as we explore the many benefits of CO2 and I hope you will share what you read and learn with others. Societal change occurs as individuals become informed one by one. Together we can help make that happen!

ANDREW BREITBART FREEDOM CENTER AT THE HEARTLAND INSTITUTE

On March 1, 2016, on the fourth anniversary of his death, The Heartland Institute dedicated the public meeting space in its new home in Arlington Heights in honor of Andrew Breitbart.

The Andrew Breitbart Freedom Center is a state-of-the-art meeting facility with seating for 75. Events are scheduled to take place every week in the space, featuring authors of new books, freedom activists and thinkers, and civic and business leaders.

"Andrew Breitbart was a genuine American hero," said Joseph Bast, president of The Heartland Institute, in a video announcing the dedication. "He inspired millions of people to stand up and speak the truth about what is happening in America. We could not be more pleased to have his name forever affixed to The Heartland Institute. We are honored that his family and friends believe this is a suitable addition to his legacy."

For more information about the Andrew Breitbart Freedom Center, please contact Nikki Comerford at ncomerford@heartland.org or 312/377-4000.

Supreme Court Restores Limits on Executive Agencies

By H. Sterling Burnett

During the final weeks of the U.S. Supreme Court's 2022 term, the Justices issued some truly historic rulings. In doing so, the Court went a long way toward reestablishing itself as a coequal branch of government designed to uphold individual rights guaranteed by the U.S. Constitution against illegal government restrictions, while defending the separation of powers, laid out in the Constitution, among the branches of the federal government and between the federal government and states. The cases decided by the Court included the president's power to set immigration policy, state and local governments' discrimination against expressions of religious faith, limits on gun rights, and the federal guarantee of access to abortions, among numerous other issues the Court ruled on.

As important as the rulings in this wide range of cases are, the decision in West Virginia v. EPA, setting limits on the administrative state's powers, is arguably the most consequential and far-reaching from an economic standpoint and in regard to the Constitution's separation and delegation of powers.

The 6-3 decision written by Chief Justice John Roberts in West Virginia v. EPA denies the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency's (EPA) attempt to use an obscure provision of the 1963 Clean Air Act to usurp states' longstanding authority to manage their electric power grids, by limiting the allowable generating sources. In its 2015 Clean Power Plan, the EPA tried to force states to close their coal plants, limit use of natural gas, and expand wind and solar generation in order to "decarbonize" America's power supply.

The Court majority held that the EPA grossly overstepped its statutory authority in regulating carbon dioxide. The U.S. Constitution delegates to Congress alone the power to regulate interstate commerce. Unelected bureaucrats may not usurp that power by addressing major questions, meaning policies that are politically and economically significant, without clear direction from the legislature. Carbon dioxide is ubiquitous, and sharply limiting it by restructuring the nation's power grid is a major undertaking that would impose trillions of dollars in costs, affect millions of jobs, and disrupt every sector of the economy. Redesigning the nation's power grid, as the EPA attempted to do by dictating how the states power their economies, is a major policy undertaking, and Congress did not delegate it to the EPA.

Not only did the Court's majority find Congress never explicitly granted the EPA the kind of power it claimed, Congress had taken up proposals to limit carbon dioxide emissions on several occasions and chose not to enact them, Roberts noted. "At bottom, the Clean Power Plan essentially adopted a cap-and-trade scheme, or set of state cap-and-trade schemes, for carbon," Roberts wrote. "Congress, however, has consistently rejected proposals to amend the Clean Air Act to create such a program. It has also declined to enact similar measures, such as a carbon tax."

A concurring opinion authored by Justice Neil Gorsuch expanded on Roberts' line of reasoning. Congress's choice not to act on an issue a particular presidential administration may think is important is not a grant to executive agencies undertake action on their own, regardless of how dire the administration or agency may believe the problem to be.

Gorsuch writes, When Congress seems slow to solve problems, it may be only natural that those in the Executive Branch might seek to take matters into their own hands. But the Constitution does not authorize agencies to use pen-and-phone regulations as substitutes for laws passed by the people's representatives. In our Republic, "[i]t is the peculiar province of the legislature to prescribe general rules for the government of society." Fletcher v. Peck, 6 Cranch 87, 136 (1810). Because today's decision helps safeguard that foundational constitutional promise, I am pleased to concur. "The Supreme Court rightly stayed in its lane in this case, as the Trump Court has increasingly been doing, restoring the separation of powers that is necessary to avert tyranny while leaving policy questions to Congress," said S. T. Karnick, a senior fellow at The Heartland Institute, in a press release commenting on the ruling. "Ruling narrowly on whether the EPA was operating under authority granted by Congress in declaring carbon dioxide a pollutant, the Court correctly determined that the agency had overstepped its bounds, and that is that.

"Regardless of one's opinion of the policy the rule was meant to establish, the EPA had no authority to impose it," said Karnick.

The Court's ruling in West Virginia v. EPA has implications far beyond the EPA's desire to regulate greenhouse gas emissions. The court's reasoning also limits the ability of cabinet departments, such as the Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD) and the Department of Transportation (DOT), and agencies such as the Securities and Exchange Commission (SEC) and the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission (FERC) to regulate greenhouse gas emissions. If the EPA, which is charged with protecting the environment, can't restructure the economy to limit greenhouse gas emissions, neither can other departments or agencies for which protecting the environment is at best tangential to their areas of authority. The Court's ruling should effectively bar the proposed rules at HUD, the DOT, and FERC intended to force public housing developers, infrastructure developers, and utilities to limit greenhouse gases to obtain approval for their projects. And with the Court's reasoning in mind, the SEC should not be allowed to dictate that every publicly traded company account for and develop plans to address climate change or face government sanctions.

The Court's ruling goes far beyond the issue of climate change. With this decision, the Court has effectively informed federal agencies that the separation of powers is alive and well, and Congress alone makes law. Going forward, departments and agencies will have to exercise appropriate restraint and humility when regulating, strictly adhering to their mission and the letter of the laws passed by Congress. If executive agencies enact policies that involve major questions, courts will no longer necessarily defer to their judgements about whether a particular rule or policy is justified or sanctioned by Congress.

As Steve Milloy, a member of The Heartland Institute's board of directors, wrote in an editorial responding to the Court's ruling in West Virginia V. EPA, there remains a lot of work to do to halt dangerous efforts to end fossil fuel use and restructure the economy to far-left elitists' liking. But the Supreme Court's decision is a very good start.

The new study, from 15 researchers at universities, research institutes, and government agencies in China and the United States, examined the incidence of premature mortality attributable to nonoptimal temperatures across all the provinces of China. Between 498,000 and 704,000 deaths were attributable to nonoptimal temperatures in China in 2019, with the best estimate being 593,000 premature deaths, the scientists found. Of the deaths traced to nonoptimal temperatures, 580,000 of were caused by health factors attributed to cold temperatures, and approximately 13,000 were tied to warm temperatures.

This research indicates approximately 46 times more people in China died from cardiovascular and respiratory problems effected by nonoptimal cold temperatures than nonoptimal hot temperatures.

China is the most populous country on Earth, and its results coincide with the findings of two previous large-scale (global), long-term studies previously published in The Lancet (in 2015 and 2021): cold kills more people than heat, and should the Earth continue its modest warming, the number of deaths attributable to nonoptimal temperatures should decline sharply.

The 2021 Lancet study examined premature mortality tied to nonoptimal temperatures across 43 countries accounting for more than five million such deaths annually between 2000 and 2019. Regardless of the country or region—cold, hot, or temperate—cold-related deaths greatly outnumber heat-related deaths, accounting for 10 to 20 times as many fatalities, the scientists found.

ISLANDS GROWING FASTER THAN SEAS ARE RISING

A report published in Human Progress found the claim that rising seas driven by climate change are submerging small island nations is bunk. Analyst Joakim Book writes, A repeated fear—and political football—in the climate change conversation is the plight of small island nations. When the United Nations' climate summits roll around, these nations, consisting of islands and atolls barely a few feet above sea level, are, like clockwork, made out to be victims of an ever-encroaching ocean. Because seawater level rises have accelerated in recent decades and low-lying islands are supposedly the most vulnerable, we'd expect at least some of them to have lost land area to the sea.

In reviewing the literature, Book found sea levels are rising by only 3 to 3.6 millimeters per year, not the computer-model-generated runaway rate of 25 millimeters cited in most stories claiming small-island nations are being submerged by rising seas. Even more importantly (and unsurprisingly), Book found most island nations are taking adaptive measures to harden themselves against sea level rise instead of acting helpless and doing nothing about it. "Globally speaking, the world is reclaiming more area from the oceans than the rising tides swallow," Book writes. Research from far-flung locations in the Netherlands, Vietnam, and island chains in Tuvalu, the Marshall Islands, and the Maldives shows these areas are gaining land mass and their populations, infrastructure, and economies are growing despite the (slowly) rising seas.

These research papers have been previously discussed in Climate Realism posts, including here, here, here, and here. "Despite gradual sea level rise, the most low-lying island nations on the planet are growing—they are adapting to rising sea levels and overcoming the changes that their natural environment presents to them," Book writes.

controversy over EPA's "new found authority" by applying the rules of statutory construction. Such a ruling would have been very narrow. Even if the court ruled against EPA, the narrowness of the ruling would have permitted EPA to propose many more such schemes using different "new found powers." Fortunately, however, the court recognized the issue was more than a power-hungry EPA, it was a power-hungry federal government that needed checking.

The court noted, it rejected the Biden administration's use of the Occupational Safety and Health Act ("OSHA") to mandate 84 million Americans either obtain a Covid-19 vaccine or submit to weekly testing. It also discussed its rejection of the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention's asserted authority to impose a nationwide eviction moratorium to stem the spread of Covid. Recognizing that federal agencies "were asserting highly consequential power beyond what Congress could reasonably be understood to have granted," it took up the climate change case.

EPA's massive regulatory scheme to regulate climate change made it easy for the court to formally announce the "Major Question Doctrine." It held that regulatory agencies can only act on matters of economic and political significance if the agency… point[s] to "clear congressional authority." Moreover, "Agencies have only those powers given to them by Congress, and 'enabling legislation' is generally not an 'open book' to which the agency may add pages and change the plot line."

While the environmental community had some successes in its efforts to impose law by judicial fiat, Executive Order and by regulation, the West Virginia case put all those genies back in the proverbial bottle.

The Supreme Court highlights Congress consistently rejecting climate legislation

The court wrote, "Congress, however, has consistently rejected proposals to amend the Clean Air Act to create such a program [regulating climate change]." It cited the American Clean Energy and Security Act of 2009, the Clean Energy Jobs and American Power Act of 2009, the Climate Protection Act of 2011, and Save our Climate Act of 2011. The Supreme Court was kind to the environmental community. There were many more failed attempts by the environmental community to enact a comprehensive legal structure to address climate change: The Kyoto Protocol (Senate voted 95-0 against ratification), The Paris Agreement (Lacking votes, it was never submitted as a Treaty); McCain-Lieberman, Kerry-Lieberman-Graham, and others that never received a vote. Congress clearly spoke. Unfortunately, the environmental community was, and is likely, still not willing to abide by the outcome of a democratic debate.

The environmental community viewed shopping for judges the same as shopping for shoes, pick the ones you like.

As the environmental community realized Congress would not impose a massive climate change scheme on American society, it orchestrated a well-funded, highly coordinated, nationwide litigation campaign to persuade courts to impose such a system. It filed lawsuits across the nation under any statute that might relate to climate change – Clean Air Act, (186), Endangered Species and other wildlife statutes (174), National Environmental Protection Act (322), Clean Water Act (58), miscellaneous land use statutes (168), constitutional claims under the Commerce Clause (20), First, Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments (41); under state laws (464), common law (29), public trust (27) and securities and financial statutes (24).

When legislation and lawsuits fail, it is time for the superficial power of Executive Orders

Executive Orders are nothing more than orders of the president to the executive branch of government. The reach of such orders is limited to federal operations. But desperate times call for desperate measures. Since the environmental community failed to persuade Congress and most courts of their righteousness of belief, they needed a "Hail Mary." On Biden's first day in office, he issued several Executive Orders to address climate change. He further directed all executive departments to place a moratorium on oil and gas leasing and fabricated a calculation of the Social Cost of Carbon to justify the high cost of climate change regulations.

A week later, Biden ordered a whole-of-government approach to address climate change. The approach resulted in agencies like the Securities and Exchange Commission, which regulates the stock market, proposing climate disclosure rules to force all public companies to provide detailed reporting on climate risks and emissions. On related matters, the financial regulators were pressured to deny financing to fossil fuel companies, some of our biggest corporations.

"God's timing is always perfect. Trust his delays" Tony Evans

In 2009 EPA was finalizing rules to implement its "Endangerment Finding," i.e.; greenhouse gases contribute to man-made climate change that may endanger public health and welfare. The U.S. Chamber of Commerce, supported by several business organizations, petitioned the agency to rescind its Endangerment Findings for a failure to disclose the data supporting the Endangerment Finding and for lacking statutory authority. It was believed EPA's data was not peer-reviewed as required under the Information Quality Act ("IQA") to determine its objectivity and level of its uncertainty. These were reasonable requests considering EPA was seeking to regulate the entire U.S. economy. EPA summarily denied the petition. Those believing EPA's data was seriously flawed and in need of cross-examination, recommended that the chamber file suit against EPA.

The environmental community attacked the chamber asserting a trial seeking access to the data was a modern-day "Scopes Monkey trial." Concurrently, the then leader of the chamber was being pressured not to file the lawsuit. A few chamber members who benefitted from the government's climate subsidies publicly dropped their membership to protest the mere consideration of a lawsuit. The then Administrator of EPA requested a private, confidential breakfast with the Chamber's leader. The pressure became too great and the Chamber's leader declined to file the lawsuit challenging EPA's Endangerment Findings. That lawsuit was the last opportunity for the opponents of the Endangerment Findings to stop it from going final. Since the suit was not filed, EPA finalized the Endangerment Findings, thereby establishing, the findings as the scientific foundation for climate change without being subject to IQA, cross – examination or the release of all relevant and material data.

While opponents of future regulations could still make administrative law challenges to future proposed climate rules, the scientific foundation (Endangerment Findings) was deemed fact, thereby making such challenges problematic.

EPA had full roaming rights over the regulatory process between 2010 – 2016. The Supreme Court in that time period was liberal in philosophy, supported big government, and a staunchly pro-regulatory court by a 6-3 or 5-4 margin, depending on how the wind was blowing the chief's hair that day. Had a case questioning the legality of agency regulatory overreach reached that court, it very likely would have ruled that EPA had the power to craft any regulation necessary to control climate change.

What the vanquished could not know during the many years in regulatory hell, was a fortuitous series of events would reverse their fate. A man named Trump would be sworn in as president in 2017. He would be able to appoint three new justices to the court in one term, thereby reversing the court's judicial philosophy from liberal to conservative. The conservative court was willing to check the administrative state.

The Supreme Court imposes regulatory sanity. With the Endangerment Finding being final, Obama's EPA finalized its cap-and-trade emissions scheme which it called the Clean Power Plan ("CPP"). EPA's legal support rested on section 111 of the CAA and its scientific support rested in the Endangerment Findings. Litigation was initiated against the CPP and it continued throughout the Obama, Trump and Biden administrations, with no resolution of the issue.

Shortly after the election of President Trump, his EPA repealed the CPP and put in its place the Affordable Clean Energy rule that limited EPA's regulatory power to available emission reduction technologies. On Trump's last day in office the DC Circuit Court of Appeals vacated the Trump rule, however, before President Biden could reinstate a new CPP rule, the Supreme Court accepted the case for review.

What is remarkable about the West Virginia case is with all the procedural wrangling throughout three presidential administrations, the CPP never went into effect due to judicial stays and reversals. With climate change regulation causing regulatory chaos, the conservative Supreme Court realized it must address the scope of agency power to preserve the Constitution. It did so without reviewing the science of climate change as contained in the Endangerment Finding. Rather, by examining how EPA was manipulating the regulatory process to make new law without Congress, the court found a way to address the most significant issue posed by the regulatory state – agencies exercising legislative power without congressional authorization.

While the Supreme Court held that "Congress could not have intended to delegate a decision of such economic and political significance (regulation of climate change) to an agency [EPA] in so cryptic of a fashion," its decision applies to all agencies that enact major political and economic matters without "clear congressional authority." Clearly the court was signaling to all federal agencies, e.g.; OSHA and CDC, that they cannot regulate beyond the powers given them by Congress.

Had the environmental community been successful in expanding the authority of agencies to regulate climate change without statutory authorization, many agencies would search for and find "long-extant authorities" to further diminish the role of Congress. By affirming the role of Congress, the Supreme Court clearly reinforces the constitutional separation of powers, a structure in which Congress is the lawmaker, not agencies.

What is so mystifying about the long battle over the power of EPA to regulate climate change is the ironic ending to the struggle. In the end, EPA's aggressive regulatory overreach resulted in limits being placed on the regulatory powers of all federal agencies.

William L. Kovacs served as senior vice president at the U.S. Chamber of Commerce and led the organization's successful opposition to the environmental community's costly climate change legislative proposals from 1998 to 2017. His book, Reform the Kakistocracy, is the winner of the 2021 Independent Press Award for Political/Social Change.

Russia's invasion of Ukraine is forcing Europe to reconsider its commitment to ending fossil fuel use. Countries from Denmark to Germany and beyond are reopening coal plants once shuttered to fight climate change and are restarting or advancing plans for domestic natural gas development. France 24 reports Austria, Germany, and the Netherlands are removing all restrictions on the use of coal to fuel power plants and are reopening shuttered plants to keep their electric power grids from collapsing because of the loss of Russian natural gas upon which each country had become reliant. "The cabinet has decided to immediately withdraw the restriction on production for coal-fired power stations from 2002 to 2024," Rob Jetten, the Dutch minister for climate and energy policy, told journalists, France 24 reports. Before the announcement, the Netherlands had limited fossil fuel plants to providing no more than a third of the electric power generated in the country.

While reaffirming its commitment to phase out coal use by 2030, Germany announced it was restarting previously shuttered coal power plants after Gazprom cut deliveries via the Nord Stream gas pipeline last week. Green Party representative Robert Habeck, told France 24 the government's decision to revert to coal was 'bitter, but indispensable for reducing gas consumption.'"

Austria announced it was working with the country's main electricity supplier to bring a closed coal-fueled power station in the southern city of Mellach back online because of the loss of natural gas from Russia.

In addition to addressing electric power shortfalls tied to the war in Ukraine, some European countries are moving to produce domestic supplies of gas to ensure they are not left without power in the event of other crises limiting access to foreign energy, Euractiv reports.

The Dutch, for example, announced a joint Dutch-German North Sea natural gas drilling operation that had been blocked by the German state of Lower Saxony was now moving forward, the German state having withdrawn its objections. Drilling is expected to begin in 2024. In addition, Albania, Italy, Romania, and Slovakia are all moving forward with plans to develop domestic reserves of natural gas, Euractiv reports.

For many EU governments, energy security, or at least the desire to have electric power and thus stay in political power, are evidently trumping climate commitments

WMC Statement on Supreme Court Ruling Reining in the EPA

MADISON – On Thursday, the Supreme Court of the United States ruled in West Virginia v. EPA that Congress has not given the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) the authority to cap carbon dioxide at levels the Obama-era Clean Power Plan aimed to do. In the decision, the Court said, "it is not plausible that Congress gave EPA the authority to adopt on its own such a regulatory scheme…a decision of such magnitude and consequence rests with Congress itself, or an agency acting pursuant to a clear delegation from that representative body."

Following the ruling, WMC Executive Vice President of Government Relations Scott Manley released the below statement:

"Today's ruling is a major win for the rule of law, and it ensures that decisions with massive impact on the economy can only be made by officials who answer directly to the voters and not unelected bureaucrats. Environmental regulations must not only be based in science, but also balance the economic impact they will have. We applaud the Supreme Court for protecting the voice of the people, the rule of law, the business community and the overall economy."

SCIENCE & ENVIRONMENTAL POLICY PROJECT

The Week That Was July 9, 2022

Quote of the Week:

Number of the Week:

85% more than total capability

This Week:

By Ken Haapala, President, Science and Environmental Policy Project (SEPP)

The Science & Environmental Policy Project began in late 1990 as a research effort by atmospheric physicist S. Fred Singer and a handful of graduate students working out of a small office in downtownWashington, D.C.The Project had two goals: (1) to gather material for a book on global environmental issues,and (2) to conduct a survey of scientists affiliated with the UN Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change to determine the extent of what was, even then, being touted as scientific "consensus" on global warming.

What the graduate students discovered with their survey convinced Dr. Singer to set his book aside and instead to circulate among senior members of the American Meteorological Society a "Statement by Atmospheric Scientists" on greenhouse warming, which was quickly endorsed by 46 leading climatologists and atmospheric physicists (and eventually by nearly 100). That statement, issued on February 27, 1992, drew widespread media attention and was cited more than 150 times in the press. It was the first inkling journalists had that there was no scientific consensus on the reality of a global warming. Indeed, there was raging debate.

The Science & Environmental Policy Project was incorporated in the state of Virginia in 1992, and established as a nonprofit, 501(c)3 educational organization in late 1993.Today, having expanded from that core of 46 scientists, it draws on an international network of some of the finest minds in science who donate their time to promoting sound, credible, peer-reviewed research as the only basis for the health and environmental policies that affect us all.

You can help in two ways:

1. Download SEPP reports, press releases, and articles and pass them on – to newspaper editors, journalists, educators, civic leaders, and others. Help stop the fearmongering and the distortion of science.This is the most important thing you can do.

2. Support SEPP with your tax-deductible contributions. The environmental pressure groups, which present so much wrong information, have a combined clout of more than $1 billion a year.The Science & Environmental Policy Project has had far-reaching impact on less than one-hundredth of one percent of that figure. It's money well and effectively spent.

Scope: Justice Elena Kagan's dissent in West Virginia v. EPA is discussed further. Probably unintentionally, the dissent highlights what is wrong with the administrative state, reliance on a government of experts. The views of Francis Menton and William Briggs are discussed.

Boris Johnson, the UK leader at the UN 26th Conference of Parties to the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change, (UNFCCC) in Glasgow, now called UN Climate Change Conference, has resigned as the prime minister of the United Kingdom. UK commentator Paul Homewood suggests a sixteen-point program for the new prime minister. The public is slowly learning how economically disastrous the Net Zero pledge given in Glasgow can be.

The Biden administration is retaliating against the US public for the administration's defeat before the Supreme Court. Its childish behavior is discussed by Menton and others.

With Russian invasion of Ukraine, Germany and other European Countries face a bleak, cold winter. As discussed in last week's TWTW, Menton considers Germany was the first country to hit the wall – realize that Net Zero is disastrous. Problems with trying to substitute Russian natural gas with gas from other countries are becoming clear. As usual, many academics do not understand financially challenging problems or technological limitations until it is too late.

Issues with electric vehicles are discussed, including a proposed electric combine harvester, a complex labor-saving machine critically need a few months of the year.

Missing – The Whole Truth: Supreme Court Associate Justice Elena Kagan was Solicitor General of the United States from March 2009 to August 2010 when she went to the Supreme Court. Previously she had been Dean of the Harvard Law School. According to the Department of Justice:

"The task of the Office of the Solicitor General is to supervise and conduct government litigation in the United States Supreme Court. Virtually all such litigation is channeled through the Office of the Solicitor General and is actively conducted by the Office. The United States is involved in approximately two-thirds of all the cases the U.S. Supreme Court decides on the merits each year."

Justice Kagan must be familiar with the Oath given by Federal judges to a witness before their testimony:

"Do you solemnly swear [or affirm] that all the testimony you are about to give in the case now before the court will be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, so help you God?"

As stated by Menton, in her dissent in West Virginia v. EPA, to which two other justices concurred, Kagan wrote:

"Climate change's causes and dangers are no longer subject to serious doubt. Modern science is "unequivocal that human influence" —in particular, the emission of greenhouse gases like carbon dioxide — "has warmed the atmosphere, ocean and land." Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change, Sixth Assessment Report, The Physical Science Basis: Headline Statements 1 (2021). The Earth is now warmer than at any time "in the history of modern civilization," with the six warmest years on record all occurring in the last decade. U. S. Global Change Research Program, Fourth National Climate Assessment, Vol. I, p. 10 (2017); Brief for Climate Scientists as Amici Curiae 8. The rise in temperatures brings with it "increases in heat- related deaths," "coastal inundation and erosion," "more frequent and intense hurricanes, floods, and other extreme weather events," "drought," "destruction of ecosystems," and "potentially significant disruptions of food production." American Elec. Power Co. v. Connecticut, 564 U. S. 410, 417 (2011) (internal quotation marks omitted). If the current rate of emissions continues, children born this year could live to see parts of the Eastern seaboard swallowed by the ocean. See Brief for Climate Scientists as Amici Curiae 6. Rising waters, scorching heat, and other severe weather conditions could force "mass migration events[,] political crises, civil unrest," and "even state failure." Dept. of Defense, Climate Risk Analysis 8 (2021). And by the end of this century, climate change could be the cause of "4.6 million excess yearly deaths." See R. Bressler, The Mortality Cost of Carbon, 12 Nature Communications 4467, p. 5 (2021)." [Boldface added.]

Previous TWTW's have discussed the essay by William Happer and Richard S. Lindzen filed on June 22 as a friend of the court brief in The State of Louisiana, et al. v. Joseph R. Biden, Jr. et al. The essay and the brief show how scientifically corrupt the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change (IPCC) has become, starting in 1995 with the second assessment report. Peer reviewed segments are rewritten in the Summary for Policymakers (SPM) by representatives of governments.

In August and September TWTW carried a series of posts by Stephen McIntyre showing glaring deficiencies in the SPM of Sixth Assessment Report (AR6, 2021), which Kagan cites. Graphs are composed of various proxy data that in many cases have no relationship with the actual proxy data reconstructions. Further, the SPM reconstructions show no standardization periods (calibration periods) needed to demonstrate they measure the same thing. It is like declaring a desk made of oak sawdust and glue covered by a thin veneer is solid oak.

Yet, the graphs in the SPM are used to claim that for about 1850 years global temperatures were roughly stable until the Industrial Revolution, when fossil fuels were being used to replace wood. John Christy, Director, Earth System Science Center, The University of Alabama in Huntsville reports monthly the atmospheric temperature trends. He participated in the IPCC process several times, but the IPCC refuses to publish these trends. The IPCC does not tell the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth.

Even worse, Kagan cites the U. S. Global Change Research Program (USGCRP), Fourth National Climate Assessment with thirteen participating government agencies. According to its website,

"The U.S. Global Change Research Program (USGCRP) is a federal program mandated by Congress to coordinate federal research and investments in understanding the forces shaping the global environment, both human and natural, and their impacts on society. USGCRP facilitates collaboration and cooperation across its 13 federal member agencies to advance understanding of the changing Earth system and maximize efficiencies in federal global change research.

"Together, USGCRP and its member agencies provide a gateway to authoritative science, tools, and resources to help people and organizations across the country manage risks and respond to changing environmental conditions. [Boldface added]

Posted on June 1, 2014, its vision and mission are:

"Vision – A Nation, globally engaged and guided by science, meeting the challenges of climate and global change.

"Mission – To build a knowledge base that informs human responses to climate and global change through coordinated and integrated Federal programs of research, education, communication, and decision support."

The USGCRP web site states:

"The Fourth National Climate Assessment (NCA4), developed by the U.S. Global Change Research Program (USGCRP), is a state-of-the-science synthesis of climate knowledge, impacts, and trends across U.S. regions and sectors to inform decision making and resilience-building activities across the country. It is the most comprehensive and authoritative assessment to date on the state of knowledge of current and future impacts of climate change on society in the United States." [Boldface added]

Yet the USGCRP ignores 43 years of atmospheric temperature trends taken by satellites and independently verified by instruments on weather balloons. These show that the linear trend of warming in the lower atmosphere (lower troposphere) is 0.13 degrees C per decade (0.23 F per decade). There is nothing state-of-the-art in USGCP science and the US government entities fail to "tell the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth." It is very disturbing when US Supreme Court Justices cite these administrative half-truth as evidence of fact.

In presenting evidence showing the failure of climate change predictions, William Briggs writes:

So, Kagan has bought and believes, seemingly sincerely, the failed predictions of global warming, which she calls 'climate change.' This is her adopted opinion, provided her by climate Experts, who claim there is no 'serious doubt' about their theories.

We have seen many times that her (or her Experts') quoted predictions of doom are false. There has not been an increase, but a decrease, in floods. Same for drought. There is no 'destruction of ecosystems.' And just last week a paper appeared—a peer-reviewed paper in the regime-approved journal Nature, going by the name 'Declining tropical cyclone frequency under global warming'—which shows the number of tropical cyclones has been decreasing, not increasing

Number of the Week: In estimating how much electricity will be needed to operate electric vehicles at the same standard if all petroleum vehicles in the US were replaced by electric vehicles Joseph D'Aleo calculated:

"7.617 Trillion kilowatt-hours of electricity would be the energy equivalent required to replace petroleum fuel for transportation. 4.116 Trillion kilowatt-hours of electricity equals the total generation capability of the United States."

The 7.6 Trillion kilowatt-hours is 85% more than total US electricity generation capability. See link under Alternative, Green ("Clean") Vehicles.

of those billionaires start arguing about who is more saintly (and sanctimonious) when it comes to preventing the alleged Climate Crisis.

Elon Musk and Bill Gates have been quibbling about which of them cares more about climate change. Musk recently refused a "philanthropic opportunity" with Gates because the Microsoft co-founder still has a half-billion-dollar "short position against Tesla," which Musk says is "the company doing the most to solve climate change." Gates says he gives more to climate causes than anyone else, including Musk.

However, as happens too often with elites who promote climate activist agendas, when it comes to ensuring human and planetary health, they both ignore evidence, the big picture – and their own lifestyles, including private jets and multiple mansions. They're not alone.

After spending eight years attacking fossil fuels, former-President Obama installed a 2,500-gallon propane system at his 6,900-square-foot Martha's Vineyard home, which is apparently safe from rising seas that endanger other coastal properties (resulting from propane, oil and natural gas emissions).

Amazon founder Jeff Bezos led an entourage of 400 luminaries, dignitaries and "green" CEOs flying private jets to the 2021 COP-26 climate confab in Glasgow. Two years earlier, currency manipulator George Soros and 1,500 other "global leaders" hopped their private jets to the World Economic Forum in Davos, once again to focus attention on "sustainability" and "dangerous global warming." As climate czar John Kerry explained, private jets are "the only choice" for someone as important as he is.

Not to be outdone, Leonardo DiCaprio flew a private jet to New York City in 2016 to accept an environmental award, then flew it back to France a day later. "Climate change is real!" he intoned.

Of course it's real. It's been "real" throughout Earth's history, and there is no Real World evidenceto support assertions that manmade greenhouse gases have replaced the powerful natural forces that drove past climate fluctuations, or that fossil fuel emissions are now causing dangerous warming and weather.

Computer models are not evidence, and their predictions generally conflict with actual world events. Why should we disrupt our energy, economy and living standards because models claim there's a crisis? Yet models are always the last refuge for the false prophets of climate Armageddon.

In reality, far more people die in cold weather than in hot spells, and a slightly warmer planet would be quite beneficial for both humanity and the plant and animal kingdoms.

There is simply no credible evidence that today's climate fluctuations and weather events are due to fossil fuels, instead of the same natural forces that have operated throughout Earth history. Tornado records show fewer violent twisters 1950-1985 than during the 36 years since. Not a single Category 3-5 hurricane made U.S. landfall for a record 12 years (2005-2012).

Three especially "brutal" droughts during a 200-year dry spell caused the Mayan civilization to collapse by 930 AD. Multiple droughts struck the Chaco Canyon (Four Corners) region 1130-1450, helping to end the Anasazi civilization. Extreme dry conditions contributed to the decline of the ancient South Arabian kingdom of Himyar, causing political unrest and war, and fostering the spread of Islam. The Pleistocene glacial epochs and Little Ice Age brought "frozen droughts" to Europe, Asia and North America.

Even worse than the fake science and endless fear-mongering, their proposed remedies to the Climate Crisis would be far more harmful to people and planet than the warming and weather they worry about.

Replacing fossil-fuel (and nuclear) electricity generation would mean blanketing the planet with millions of wind turbines, billions of solar panels, billions of backup battery modules, thousands of mines to produce the raw materials for these technologies (mostly Chinese-operated), and hundreds of landfills for worn-out, 300-foot-long wind turbine blades and other dilapidated "green energy" equipment. (Thankfully the United States has a huge, thus far unused landfill: Arizona's Grand Canyon.)

The ease with which billionaire climate club members do business with China also conflicts with generally accepted standards of environmental and human rights ethics.

Musk is quite cozy with the Chinese Communist regime. From taking billions in regime-funded loans, to speaking at their embassy, to building a factory in Xinjiang amid the Uyghur genocide, he is surprisingly comfortable working with a state founded on ideologies of totalitarian hatred and abuse.

Gates stretched the limits of U.S. security laws to help China build nuclear reactors suitable for powering naval vessels, even as China continues making strategic long-term moves to control ever-larger swaths of the Pacific and surpass U.S. naval power in this critical region.

Incredibly, but understandably, these billionaires almost never) criticize Xi Jinping's regime. In fact, Musk has met with communist officials on multiple occasions and frequently says China "rocks" – even though it is by far the world's biggest emitter of plant fertilizing carbon dioxide (CO2) and toxic pollutants.

In fact, in 2019 China's greenhouse gas emissions were nearly 2.5 times those of the United States – and more than all the world's developed nations combined. In CO2 equivalent, China emitted 14.1 billion metric tons that year – more than a quarter of the entire world's emissions.

Musk even stopped serving on President Trump's advisory panels, to protest Mr. Trump's decision to withdraw from the meaningless Paris climate agreement that's actually a treaty.

So why are Musk and Gates so quick to criticize America – but never reprimand the People's Republic? They clearly don't live by the environmental principles they preach and won't even criticize the world's worst greenhouse gas emitter, toxic chemicals polluter, and child and slave labor practitioner.

Still worse, the policies they promote would harm global public health. As Congressman John Curtis (R-Utah), founder of the Conservative Climate Caucus, recently noted, "killing American fossil fuels just causes them to be replaced by dirtier foreign sources, in particular Chinese and Russian." Perhaps, Mr. Curtis suggested, we should instead start "attacking carbon emissions, not energy sources, through carbon capture, American innovation, natural solutions, and other paths that boost the American economy while reducing global emissions."

Over the last decade, the U.S. has reduced CO2 emissions more than any other country in the world. Yet, Musk, Gates and fellow jet-setters continue to support policies like the Paris accord, which would impose major restrictions on the U.S. while allowing China to continue increasing emissions through 2030.

Perhaps, instead, we should just stop trying to reduce CO2 emissions, since that monumental and costly global effort is driven by demands that we prevent a "manmade climate crisis" that doesn't actually exist.

If these climate activists wish to make a difference in human and environmental health around the world, they need to change their perspective and their relationship with Communist China. They need to begin looking at Real World climate and weather evidence, and practicing what they preach.

Unfortunately, they're unwilling to do so. They'd rather make noise (and more billions) than safeguard us commoners' economy and living standards, or support true productive change in America and abroad.

The Land of Opportunity

By Gary Wickert

A television commercial for Southern New Hampshire University aired over the Christmas Season concluded with the odd statement that "The world in which we live equally distributes talent. But it doesn't equally distribute opportunity." I am hard-pressed to imagine a sentiment that is more fundamentally and completely backwards than that one. That the truth could be so badly misrepresented by a so-called institution of higher learning speaks volumes as to why most of these spider holes of indoctrination are the last places you should send your innocent children for woke brain washing.

Twenty years ago, the liberal Brookings Institute joined the growing woke echo chambers by suggesting that America really didn't deserve the moniker, "Land of Opportunity." It's evidence? The thread-bare Democratic Party rally-the-ignorant mantra about unequal distribution of income. Yawn. Such tripe ignores the reality that anyone who wants to succeed in American can. True, not everybody is equally equipped to succeed. The poor white Alabama teenager from a single-family home has a significantly lower chance of financial success than the Nigeria immigrant reared by two professional parents and sent to the best schools. But it all boils down to decisions. Nobody forced the young Alabama high school student to get pregnant, drop out of school, and become dependent on drugs. We all make choices; and those choices have consequences.

In a world in which non-existent "systemic racism" has become both the bogeyman and a convenient excuse for those who make poor decisions in their lives, it is ironic that the solution to lower incomes for those who skipped school or became parents as teenagers is simply more racism. The Democratic playbook, under the guise of helping seems laser-focused on fighting phantom racism with real racism.

America has always been about equal opportunity, not equal outcome. Equality of opportunity has deep roots in our culture and history and is one of the key differences between us and Europe. It is imbedded in our Constitution, and it is the stuff of American DNA. The "equality" of socialism is the evil which robs a civilization of its excellence and punishes the achievers. It is a race to the bottom and a shortcut to shared misery. America is a meritocracy in which those who have talent, the willingness to risk everything, the work ethic to dedicate their lives to a pursuit of something, and the imagination to give them focus are rewarded for the things they achieve. Communism and socialism celebrate equality of outcome, so it is not surprising that those who have been duped into thinking such things are desirable, yet alone possible, regurgitate these failed philosophies. Whatever happened to diversity making us stronger?

As early as grade school it becomes painfully obvious who has the qualities necessary for success and who does not. When the liberal elites and the university snowflakes who have never achieved anything other than a report card and few initials following their name bemoan the fact that the top 25% of America has been improving their prospects while the bottom 75% is content to complain from their couch, it is really human nature they are at odds with. It might be said that those who have parents committed to instilling the aforementioned achiever values in their children have an advantage over those who do not. But government—especially our constitutional republic—does not exist to even such things out. It is not a substitute for good parenting.

New York Times journalist Paul Krugman recently whined about his perception that there is a lack of equal opportunity in America. It is a party line spun and repeated over and over by the left. Krugman said:

When you hear conservatives talk about how our goal should be equality of opportunity, not equality of outcomes, your first response should be that if they really believe in equality of opportunity, they must be in favor of radical changes in American society.

Krugman ignores the reality that people are different. Unless we are going to grant slower people a head-start in the 100-meter dash at the Olympic Games or present an array of basketball hoops at different heights depending on the height of the individual players, we must realize that life isn't always fair. Some people are taller, smarter, faster, stronger, and more creative than other people. Frederick Douglas famously said that America's duty is not to help our fellow man be equal; but rather to avoid hindering anybody in their pursuit of excellence. Our Constitution is designed to get out of the way of the achievers. Opportunity is part of the fabric of America. To say it doesn't exist is to propound a lie. And to say it doesn't exist equally is to ignore the differences in people. One person has the opportunity to play in the NFL, while another may be destined for discovering quasars in the universe or contending for the heavyweight boxing title of the world. There is no such thing as equal opportunity because we are all limited by the gifts that God gives us and certain shortcomings both mental and physical. That the government could or should somehow strive to ensure equal outcomes for Elon Musk and a Down's Syndrome patient is about as silly as suggesting that the government can change the climate of the earth.

It is hard to define liberty; but we know instantly when it is being infringed. Legislating equality of outcome has long been the elephant in the room when it comes to liberals. Lyndon Johnson once said that the objective is "not just equality as a right and a theory but equality as a fact and equality as a result." Lots of silly words with the intent of destroying the foundation of America and rebuilding it in a more socialist fashion.

Our hapless vice-president narrated a video entitled "Equality vs. Equity" during the 2020 election. In it she is heard saying, "It's about giving people the resources and support they need so that everyone can be on equal footing, and then compete on equal footing." Great. Nobody disagrees with that. It is an admirable goal and America does a great job of giving everybody that opportunity. However, Kamala Harris goes further and says, "equitable treatment means we all end up at the same place." Apparently, I wasn't given equitable treatment when I tried out for professional football in my twenties and was cut.

Far too many on the left conflate equality of opportunity with sameness of opportunity. As Dr. David Azerrad from the Heritage Foundation has written, equality of opportunity has meant the absence of legal impediments to getting ahead in life. It was none other than the king of transforming America, Barack Obama, who admitted:

Now, as a nation, we don't promise equal outcomes, but we were founded on the idea everybody should have an equal opportunity to succeed. No matter who you are, what you look like, where you come from, you can make it. That's an essential promise of America. Where you start should not determine where you end up.

Even Barack Obama admitted that the promise of America is a good one. We are all different, and some of us are destined to fail because of ourselves. Far too many see the difficulty which accompanies opportunity and as a result, do nothing. Far too few see the opportunity in every difficulty and move forward to overcome it.

What a boring society we would live in if everybody was the same: equally good-looking, equally gifted, and equally motivated. It is the movers and shakers in society who motivate us all; those who take risks and motivate us all to our highest potential. And that is government will never be able to do. Sameness of opportunity, by contrast, requires that all should have exactly the same opportunities in life. Such conditions have never existed in any society in the history of the planet. When someone sits down and waits for opportunity to come to them, it never does.

America is the land of equal opportunity for all. And while it is popular to deride our country because of the inevitable inequality of outcomes and income, all one has to do is look to the millions of illegals teeming across America's porous borders to understand how the rest of the world views us. To them, we are still the shining city on a hill.

The Target on Australia's Back

By Viv Forbes

Congratulations to Ted Dwyer in "Spectator Australia" (25/6/22) for asking why Australia has bet-the-house on the US/NATO adventurism in Ukraine.

There are few innocent parties in Ukraine today - an undeclared civil war has been simmering for this whole century.

Since the Mongol destruction of Kiev in 1240, almost everyone has invaded Ukraine – its flat fertile lands and mineral resources attract plunderers. Russia has a long memory of invaders from the west including Napoleon, the Austrians, the Poles, the Swedes and Hitler's Nazis.

Russia's Catherine the Great annexed the Crimea in 1783 and established the Black Sea Fleet. Ukraine was one of the founding Soviet Republics in 1922, and Russian is the mother tongue for several areas of Ukraine. Modern Ukraine was founded in 1992 when the Soviet Union collapsed but Russian areas like Luhansk and Donetsk refused to be a part of Ukraine. They said they "were and always would be Russian".

Russia has seen NATO as a threat for decades - it has expanded from its 12 founders in 1949 to 30 members plus 40 "Security Partners" today - always creeping closer to Russia.

Australia has no vital interests in Ukraine and should not get embroiled in a messy foreign family quarrel. Sending Australian bushmasters into Ukraine against Russia will prove as futile as sending the British Light Brigade into Crimea against Russia in 1854.

What is happening in Ukraine today is absolutely awful, but it will not be helped by sending more weapons.

There are only two possible solutions – total defeat of one side, or separation of the warring parties. We need to remember the lessons of the two Koreas, the two Irelands, the two Chinas, and India and the two Pakistans – partition may be the only humane way of bringing peace to Ukraine.

Tit-for-tat harassment of "oligarchs" on both sides helps nothing – just sells newspapers.

Adding to the risk for Australia in taunting Russia was Ex-PM Morrison's pointless baiting of the Chinese over the source of Covid. There are probably several guilty parties in that crime but the demand for answers should have gone to WHO, not China.

Australian politicians have made enemies of two very powerful nations, one of whom is our biggest customer. These two Eurasian giants, Russia and China, control all the vast resource-rich lands from the Black Sea to the Sea of Japan. They have entered a formal alliance and they have potent allies. And the unlike green-power warriors "defending" Australia, they have nuclear weapons and use powerful and reliable nuclear energy.

Both Russia and China are key members of BRICS (Brazil, Russia, India, China and South Africa) and of the new G8 which comprises China, India, Russia, Indonesia, Brazil, Mexico, Iran and Turkey.

Australia, USA and UK have always been friends and allies, and this will continue. But sometimes friends do foolish things and they should be warned. Getting involved in a complex and largely domestic dispute in Ukraine is one of those times.

As Ted Dwyer says "Australia now has a target on its back".

While Aukus is distracted by Ukraine, China is making no secret of its aggressive intentions to invade peaceful, democratic and united Taiwan. Their treatment of dissidents in Hong Kong shows what they plan for Taiwan.

Taiwan deserves Australia's support.

We cannot help the military mess in Ukraine, and have destroyed our possible value there as an impartial mediator.

And unless we dump Net Zero Nonsense, we will soon be defenceless in a hostile world.

She pushed the Hunter Biden laptop as merely the product of a political campaign and that Trump had secret servers communicating with Russian banks. DHS did not even pretend to support free speech. It simply stated the criticisms of the DGB were "grossly and intentionally mischaracterized" and that the rollout was flawed and poorly coordinated. Translated into English, the "DHS tried to subvert free speech, but its communications department screwed it up."

But as the old saying goes, "when at first you don't succeed, try, try again." The Disinformation Task Force is another try.

The federal government has not identified the functions of the Disinformation Task Force other than it will protect the online musings of women, LGBTQI+, political leaders, public figures, activists, and journalists. Biden believes these groups are the targets of sexualized forms of online harassment that undermine their ability to exercise their human rights and participate in democracy.

Within 180 days, the task force will provide the president with a whole-of-government approach to prevent online gender bias. The vagueness of the task force allows it to do almost anything to prohibit online speech by males, conservatives, and for sure conservative males will likely be in the same category as parents who attend school board meetings - "terrorists." The clearest glimpse of how the task force will function is observable in the illegal protests at Justice Kavanaugh's house. The Justice is a conservative, white male whose family and life are under direct threat of assassination. Yet, the Attorney General refuses to protect the Justice as federal law requires. So much for the rule of law in the U.S.!

These disinformation boards are only the tip of the proverbial iceberg.

Before the DGB was even a twinkle in the eye of the federal government, there was a long history of federal lies, propaganda, and secrecy. Taking a step back in history will place federal deception in perspective. Some laws permit the federal government to lie and spew propaganda to the American people. Worse, the few efforts mandating the public be given accurate information have been repealed or the efforts have been ignored to the point of abuse.

The DGB allegedly was to assist national security agencies in standardizing how they address disinformation connected to violent threats against the U.S. It was established soon after the U.S. Attorney General identified white supremacists, not groups like Al Qaeda or ISIS, as the nation's most prominent domestic terror threat. Moreover, the Attorney General was so concerned about vocal parents at school board meetings he tasked the "FBI and U.S. Attorneys' offices… to outline strategies for addressing parent harassment, intimidation and threats of violence against school board members across the country." The Attorney General denied such efforts were to intimidate parents; however, whistleblowers provided House Republicans with evidence that the FBI targeted the Loudoun County, Virginia parents who protested school Covid policy.

Based on the federal government's actions, it appears the focus of the DGB was on the federal government's greatest concern - free-thinking citizens. Why is this a surprise since spying on and deceiving Americans has been the policy for decades?

Law Enforcement Lies with Immunity?

The government has created a double standard for lying. All levels of government criminalize citizens that lie to them but generally grant law enforcement officers immunity when lying. If a citizen lies to a law enforcement officer or a prosecutor in an investigation, the citizen commits a felony under federal and state law. If the law enforcement officer or prosecutor lies or deceives the citizen during the same investigation, the officer or prosecutor is, in most instances, immune from liability. Scholars find law enforcement officers have near-total immunity when telling lies or deceiving a person while doing undercover work, searches, seizures, and interrogations. For nearly all purposes, police and prosecutors have such broad discretion they de facto have immunity when lying to citizens. Prosecutors, while not having statutory authority to lie in the crime charging or plea-bargaining processes, it is almost impossible to challenge their discretion.

And then there is the secret, illegal spying on Americans that is rarely disclosed to Congress and for which no government official is indicted. A recently revealed example of such conduct, the Immigration and Customs Enforcement ("ICE"), an agency to protect the borders of the United States from the illegal entry of people, established a massive domestic surveillance operation. ICE is the same agency that allows millions of illegal immigrants into this country without even knowing their names. According to a May 12, 2022, article in USA Today, ICE secured private information on 3 out of 4 Americans for over a decade and never reported such spying to Congress, even though it has no authority to conduct such spying.

Presidents and Federal Agencies Tell the biggest lies of all.

Presidents hold formal news conferences to tell us how their efforts have made America strong and free. Yet, citizens often discover that it is all lies and propaganda. From the Pentagon Papers, we found the extensive lies told by Lyndon Johnson about the Viet Nam War in which 58,200 American soldiers and over 2 million Vietnamese civilians were killed. From Edward Snowden, we learned that the National Security Agency, with the cooperation of the telecommunications industry, secretly and illegally conducted many global surveillance programs to spy on Americans. Yet, Snowden was charged with three felonies for leaking information about the government's illegal activities. We learned of the several unauthorized, secret, undisclosed CIA data repositories that collected data on American citizens from several congressional investigations. Then there is the illegal FBI spying on Martin Luther King and the enthusiastic use by the FBI of the false charges of Russian collusion contained in the Steele dossier to discredit president Trump in the 2020 campaign. There were also the many lies told by Biden that he had no dealings with his son's illegal businesses. Citizens have no idea how much lying the federal government undertakes to protect itself. To paraphrase an old saying, "How can you tell if a federal official is lying? Its lips are moving.

Government propaganda is legal.

In 1948 Congress enacted the Smith-Mundt Act ("SMA") that established the United States Information Agency ("USIA"), a U.S. agency to counter Soviet propaganda after World War II. Its goal was to wage psychological warfare against our enemies. The effort was formally dubbed "President Truman's Campaign of Truth." The Act, however, expressly prohibited the dissemination of the USIA propaganda in the United States.

In 1999, the USIA was formally integrated into the U.S. Department of State, which now has a legally sanctioned propaganda machine. However, in 2013, a bi-partisan Congress repealed the ban through an amendment buried in the monstrous National Defense Authorization Act of 2013. With the repeal, "Congress abolished the domestic dissemination ban, which… gives the federal government great power to influence public opinion covertly." With this action, the U.S. created a news service that "…enjoys immunity for libel, misinformation, false or fraudulent information, misrepresentation and anything else previously prohibited by SMA."

Repealing and ignoring laws to ensure government transparency and good quality information

The Information Quality Act ("IQA") and the Freedom of Information Act were enacted to ensure that the information published by the federal government is of good quality and that the government provides information about its operations to citizens requesting such information.

The IQA was enacted to guide federal agencies to ensure that the information provided by agencies is of good quality, objective, has integrity, and can be reproduced, including statical information. IQA guidelines went into effect in 2002. However, the Obama administration repealed all of these guidelines, allowing the federal government to provide poor quality and false information. The IQA would have been very useful to the American people in evaluating the many claims of Dr. Fauci in his countless television performances on Covid and American health.

Congress enacted the Freedom of Information Act to allow citizens to obtain information on what their government is doing. The federal government many times abuses the disclosure requirement under FOIA. While our government readily provides general information to the public, it is difficult, if not impossible, to secure information the government wants hidden. Obtaining that information generally requires years of litigation. In 2020, 122 FOIA lawsuits were filed by media companies and individual reporters to compel the disclosure of government records. Illustrating the lengths to which government will go to avoid disclosure exemplifies the old saying, Business groups have sought access to national studies used by EPA to support Clean Air Act regulations. The government responded by redacting all information except the words "To" and "From" on the document.

Another example of government hiding information is again the infamous Dr. Fauci. It is reported that Fauci received dozens of royalty payments from drug companies benefitting from $30 billion of grants from the National Institutes of Health, the group that pays Fauci over $456,000 a year. Fauci is identified as a royalty recipient but the amounts are not disclosed by the government.

Since nothing in the U.S. Constitution requires the federal government, to tell the truth, we must accept the wisdom of Thomas Jefferson, who wrote, "The government you elect is the government you deserve."

Abp. Viganò: Global liberalism and Communism are destroying the Church and society from within

By LifeSiteNews

Corruption in the Church and society is linked, said Archbishop Carlo Maria Viganò, and both spheres have changed into a "communist-type dictatorship."

Speaking to former Trump advisor Steve Bannon on his show Bannon's War Room, the archbishop dealt with a wide-ranging array of topics, from corruption in the Catholic Church to the Great Reset and Russia's war with Ukraine.

He described a "Manichean division between good and evil," which is manifested in such opposing views as "left vs. right, liberalism vs. fascism, globalism vs. sovereignism, vaccinism vs. no-vax."

Archbishop Viganò said that in the eyes of society the "'good guys' are obviously those on the left: liberal but supportive, globalist, inclusive, ecumenical, resilient, and sustainable," whereas "patriots, Christians, right-wingers, sovereignists, and heterosexuals" are seen as the "bad guys."

Alluding to wide-spread societal change in the West, Archbishop Viganò described this process as a "fusion of the worst of liberalism with the worst of collective socialism."

Today we see, after two years of the pandemic farce, how globalist liberalism has made use of communist and dictatorial methods to impose itself with its Great Reset, and how the communist regimes are using liberal methods to enrich the upper echelons of the party without losing total control over the population.

"This demonstrates that the geopolitical balance is shifting towards a multi-polar vision and that bipolarism fueled by the deep state is in decline," he said.

Western nations' decline mirrored in the Church

The archbishop, who served as Papal Nuncio to the U.S. for five years from 2011 to 2016, told Bannon that the "deep church" was born out of the corrupt nature of Western society, styled the "deep state."

"The deep church is an offshoot of the deep state, in a certain sense," he said. As such, Archbishop Viganò found it inevitable that "Faith and Morals" are being destroyed for the dual process of "ecumenism and synodality," since the Church is practicing the "liberal errors" of society.

For this reason it should not surprise us that we are witnessing the demolition of Faith and Morals in the name of ecumenism and synodality, applying liberal errors in the theological sphere; and on the other hand the transformation of the Papacy and the Roman Curia into a politburo in which ecclesiastical authority is both absolute and also released from its fidelity to the Magisterium, following the modalities of the exercise of power in a communist-type dictatorship.

Instead of law based on "justice," it is now built on "the convenience and utility of those who apply it," he said. For proof of this, the archbishop pointed to the Vatican's current "harsh" treatment of traditional "clergy and the faithful" in contrast to "how much indulgence the Vatican praises notorious pro-abortion activists (I am thinking of Biden and Pelosi among the most striking cases) as well as the propagandists of LGBTQ ideology and gender theory."

Our David Vs. the VOS Goliath: An essay by Adam Steen

I have lived in the flyover states for my entire life. I know how hard we work to provide for our families. I watched my parents work their entire lives to support my brothers and me. This gave me the desire to give back to our community by offering to serve. We desperately need citizens to step up and serve their communities. I believe that legislators should serve for a limited time and then return to their civilian lives.

I grew up on a farm working with my grandpa. My parents worked in the housing industry. We did not have much time to slow down and relax. The costs to just survive in our businesses were so astronomical that we worked more than half of the year just to break even. I remember as a ten year old, entering accounts payable and memorizing our federal tax I.D. number. We boys were intimately involved in helping with every aspect of our family businesses: from baling hay at the farm to hauling blocks for house foundations.

Having grown up on a farm and working my entire life to support my family, I find it a natural progression to prepare to give back to my friends and community as a Wisconsin representative. We need to stop blindly following career politicians. Instead, we should put everyday Americans in the role of setting common sense public policy.

Second to a man's salvation, government has the most influence in the life of each individual citizen in this great state of Wisconsin. It is up to us to step forward in faith and stand on the founding principles of this great country.

The Constitution was written by men who had the insight and integrity to know that the heart of man is desperately wicked. Without the help of our Creator, we can do nothing on our own.

To the best of my abilities, I will stand up for the citizens of this great state of Wisconsin and bring forth the will of We the People into the debate of public policy.

After graduating from high school, I studied at Maranatha Baptist Bible College in Watertown, Wisconsin. There, I played NCAA III soccer. Upon completion of my under-graduate degree, I worked at John Deere in Horicon as a welder on the assembly line. The time I spent on the line welding mower decks and, eventually, setting up an assembly line was invaluable. It prepared me for the next phase in my life--attending UW Madison for a second undergraduate degree.

A man is tested by the trials in his life, but the results are seldom seen right away. I was told, whether in sports or academics, that I was not good enough, or fast enough, or smart enough. Yet, I was able to push on and prevail because I knew that God had a plan for my life, and He would see it through, and He did.

I was fortunate, at UW, to have met my wife and best friend, Hannah. Together, we built a quarter scale tractor for our senior design project. Together as a family, Hannah, Ella, Abigail, and I are ready and willing to serve the people of this 63rd district.

My "opponent" and the Race

Wisconsin Assembly Speaker, Robin Vos, the longest-serving speaker in Wisconsin history, has represented the 63rd Assembly District for nearly two decades. As a result of his flippant handling of the 2020 election, the self-proclaimed "shadow governor," soon emerged as the prime target of his own political party at both the state and local level. With a newfound awareness of the powerful role We The People play in taking back our state (and country), more and more Wisconsinites began to understand the disturbing pattern of poor decisions, lack of foresight, and the inappropriate behavior that has characterized Robin Vos' tenure as Assemblyman. In the wake of a presidential election littered with scandal and amid overwhelming frustration with DC Democrats and RINO Republicans, it became increasingly intolerable and untenable that the concerns of Wisconsin citizens be spurned and dismissed by the tyrannical Robin Vos.

This past Friday, June 8th, the Wisconsin's Supreme Court ruled that ballot drop boxes are illegal under Wisconsin law. Wisconsin law is clear— drop boxes were never authorized nor intended to be used; in essence, the courts upheld Wisconsin's long-established election laws that, under the guise of the COVID pandemic, had been usurped by the Wisconsin Election Commission (WEC), as directed by Speaker Robin Vos. In Wisconsin, only the legislative body has the authority to create election law; WEC may only enforce existing law. In the summer of 2020, Speaker Vos and Wisconsin State Senator Fitzgerald single-handedly approved and encouraged the use of the illegal drop boxes, thereby bypassing due-process requirements from the full legislative body.

All state officials have a solemn responsibility to ensure that results obtained through illegality and fraud are never certified. The plenary power bestowed on the legislature by the U.S. Constitution carries with it this inherent responsibility. Regardless of the Speakers' error in taking it upon himself to authorize an illegal election practice, he must now seize the opportunity to set things right for the citizens of Wisconsin; this requires he call for an extraordinary session to honor the Assembly Joint Resolution of last session, and withdraw Wisconsin's 10 electors, wrongly certified, for Joe Biden in the 2020 election.

Finally:

We must have your support on August 9th. without we the people standing up to this tyrannical form of government then we will never be free again. The time is now. Please go to my website at steenforus.com and donate and volunteer. We know that God is on our side, please come and stand with him.

KYLE YUDES
FOR LT. GOVERNOR
PRINCIPLE OVER POLITICS

Plan of Action

Over the past two years I have traveled the state educating, empowering, and inspiring the people while fighting for our God given constitutionally protected unalienable rights. I spoke to thousands of Wisconsinites who voiced their concerns, thoughts, and feedback to how government has hurt their family. For this reason, I entered the Lt. Governor race in late October of 2021. As a voice of the people of Wisconsin I am committing to use the office of Lt. Governor to work with the Governor to execute the following action plan.

Day 1: Pandemic is over in Wisconsin

All mandates and executive orders related to the pandemic are eliminated

End any state and federal government vaccine mandates

End the state usage of the federal emergency declaration related to SARS CoV2

Wisconsin will observe doctor/patient rights giving doctors the full authority to prescribe effective treatments related to SARS CoV2 and similar diseases

Day 1: All electronic voting machine contracts with the state will be canceled

Build the foundation of eliminating fraud and restoring confidence in our elections

Eliminate the use or potential use of drop boxes

Introduce paper ballots with watermarks and barcoding

Eliminate W.E.C.

Give the Secretary of State the constitutional authority the office was created to have

Eliminate early voting for all who are not indefinitely confined or are active military

Day 1: Restore the constitution to Wisconsin

Protect all unalienable rights especially the 2nd Amendment

First 30 Days: Address Public School System and it's failures

Massive overhaul to DPI

Implement Universal School choice regardless of income level

Eliminate Common Core, Race to the Top, CRT, SEL

Focus on academics, skilled trades, and constitutional civics

First 30 Days: Build up and support law enforcement

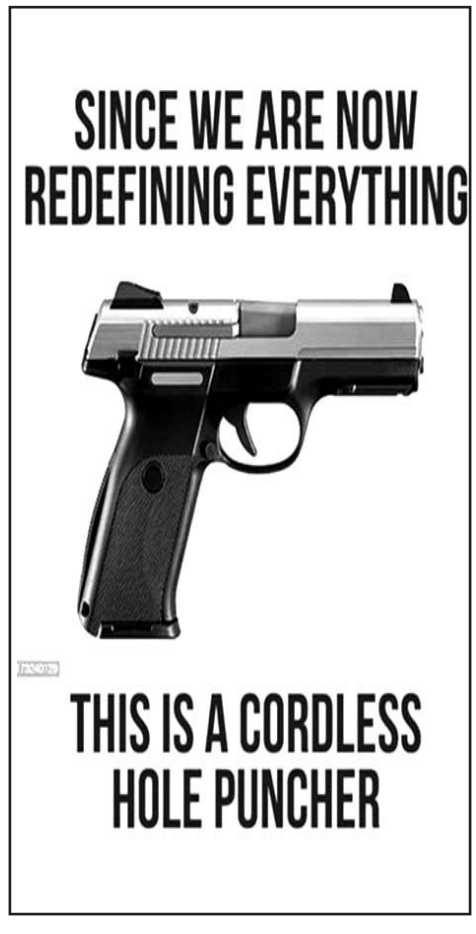
Implement advisory board of constitutional peace officers to address current issues

First 30 Days: Support our veterans - Overhaul the V.A. system in Wisconsin

Address the issues with benefits and programs for veterans

First 60 Days: Have top experts in respective fields testify in front of the AG and legislature

The people responsible for the past two years of violations must be held accountable.

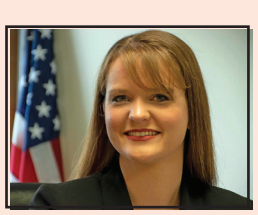


Statement from Charity Barry on Vandalism in Monroe, WI

I strongly condemn the intimidation and vandalism that took place in Monroe, WI last night. My team and I were planning an event at Vince's Pizzeria in Monroe tonight. Now because of the cowardly acts of a few radical Democrats, the owners and workers of this small business must bear the cost and consequences of this selfish and craven attempt to bully a political rival. This sort of political intimidation must stop. I will still be holding an event in Monroe, WI tonight at an undisclosed location. You can reach out to the campaign for further details.

I call on Mark Pocan to join me in condemning the violence and crime that has hit Monroe. I ask that Mark Pocan join me in calling for a thorough investigation into what happened and those responsible be brought to justice. I also ask that Mark Pocan calls for civility among his supporters as I have called for civility among mine.

This will not stop me! I will not be deterred! I am running to represent YOU, the people of Wisconsin's 2nd Congressional District. This act of weakness, this act of desperation will not stop my campaign or stay my message. I am running to win, and nothing is going to get in my way!



A Rising Star in the Republican Party

By Billie Johnson

Charity Barry is a young conservative firebrand who is challenging radical socialist Mark Pocan in Wisconsin's 2nd Congressional District. She had a fundraiser planned at Vince's Restaurant & Pizzeria in Monroe. Election integrity champion Representative Janel Brandtjen was scheduled to speak. But in the early morning hours of the day of the fundraiser, the Party of Love and Tolerance, otherwise known as the Democratic Party, again showed their true nature by vandalizing the restaurant. As you can see in the pictures it was vulgar, which these days is the standard political discourse for the left. They clearly believe Charity Barry could be a threat to Pocan. Otherwise, why bother to go out in the middle of the night and vandalize a restaurant?

Vince's owner naturally was concerned about their staff's safety and canceled the event. But the day was far from over. The Chair of the Green County Republican Party made calls to Monroe establishments seeking an alternative venue and the American Legion Post in Monroe agreed to host it. All was well until the Post received one negative phone call about it and around 4:00 pm called Barry's campaign manager and canceled. The army of General Patton is dead. It only took one phone call for The American Legion Post to surrender.

One of Barry's staff suggested the fundraiser be canceled. But Barry rejected that idea. If necessary, the fundraiser would be held in a park or on a sidewalk. She was not going to back down. That is the kind of courage we need to see from Republican leaders. But courage is a scarce commodity these days and bold leaders are clearly on backorder.

Fortunately, a member of the Green County Republican Party agreed to host the fundraiser. In the end, 30 people and many pizzas from Vince's Pizzeria made their way to a private home a few miles from Monroe to hear Janel Brandtjen endorse Charity Barry for Congress.

Over 200 Republican women are running for congress in 2022 (counting primary candidates). In 2020 Republicans flipped nine congressional seats. Female candidates won seven of those seats. With inflation eroding family incomes, Democrats pushing the transgender agenda down to the kindergarten level, and the Biden administration doing everything it can to destroy the middle class, this election is shaping up to be a wave election. A Republican can win Wisconsin's 2nd District in 2022. It's happened before. In 1990 sixteen term incumbent Democrat Robert Kastenmeier was defeated. Republicans then held the seat for the next eight years. The Charity Barry campaign is one that Reality News readers should check out.

Black Republican's viral campaign ad: 'Make Rifles Great Again'

By WorldTribune Staff

Some Second Amendment proponents are calling it "the best political ad ever."

In the ad, Jerone Davison, a Republican candidate in Arizona's new Congressional District 4, sips from a star-spangled coffee mug, dons a pair of sleek Ray-Ban sunglasses, and produces a semiautomatic KelTec SUB2000 rifle as a horde of pitchfork-wielding Klansmen advance toward his Tempe home.

"When this rifle is the only thing standing between your family and a dozen angry Democrats in Klan hoods, you just might need that semiautomatic and all 30 rounds," Davison, formerly a running back in the NFL, says in the ad.

The ad quickly went viral on Twitter, with more than 1 million views in the first five hours after it was posted.

While Second Amendment advocates lauded the ad, leftists cried foul over Davison's portrayal of Democrats in Klan apparel.

Davison responded to critics by tweeting: "I was born in 1970 in Mississippi. When the KKK came to town, I always felt safe, because my father had rifles to protect us. This video is a cinematic depiction of a situation I faced growing up. Racist white liberals love to tell me that my LIVED EXPERIENCE didn't happen!"

More could be said about the real history of the Democrat Party. As an analysis in American Thinker noted:

[T]he reality contradicting modern democratic meme is that Lincoln was a Republican bitterly opposed by Democrats; Jim Crow, like its modern counterpart the minimum wage movement, was a Democratic Party creation; the KKK was a Democratic Party spinoff; the Civil Rights Act was passed by Republicans in both the House and the Senate over prolonged Democrat opposition.

Davison hopes to unseat incumbent Democrat Rep. Greg Stanton in the new Congressional which includes Tempe, Mesa, Chandler, and Ahwatukee. First, he'll face four other lesser-known Republicans in the Aug. 2 primary.

Still More Things You Can Do Right Now to Save America

By Joe Bast

Wisconsin's primary elections are coming up on August 9. Here are some important dates and deadlines from Ballotpedia:

Mail-in registration deadline: July 20

Online registration deadline: July 20

Early voting starts: July 26

In-person registration deadline: August 5

Early voting ends: August 7

Absentee/mail-in deadline: August 9

Election day: August 9

Voting is one of the most important duties of citizenship. To find out which candidates are endorsed by conservative activists and organizations, go to https://wipatriotstoolbox.com and click on "endorsements."

In the past two issues of Reality News I identified twenty things you can do to save America. I started with basic duties of patriotic citizens such as voting in every election and contacting your elected officials by email, phone, and letter. Then I recommended becoming a pollworker, attending school and county board meetings, and eight other things.

Here are ten more things you can do:

1. Stop supporting "woke" corporations and advocacy groups such as Facebook, Disney, Ben & Jerry's, New Glarus, and Coca-Cola.

2. Donate to local Tea Party groups such as N.E.W. Patriots and Fox Valley Initiative and conservative think tanks and advocacy groups such as MacIver Institute, Badger Institute, Wisconsin Institute for Law and Liberty, and Wisconsin Voter Alliance.

3. Participate in "calls to action" issued by Heritage Action, American Family Institute, and other groups.

4. Fly the American flag in front of your house 365 days a year. Use inexpensive solar lights to keep it lit at night. Help your neighbors display the flag, too.

5. Volunteer to staff a booth or to hand out literature at parades, fairs, and festivals.

6. Do not comply with unconstitutional mandates (vaccines and masks) and laws. Boycott businesses that require masks or that are "vaccinated only."

7. Attend townhalls and listening sessions with elected officials and ask tough questions. These events are often poorly attended, so your attendance will be noticed.

8. Watch Fox News (especially Tucker Carlson) and Newsmax and read their online news updates.

9. Refuse to visit or shop at businesses that display "Black Lives Matter" signs. Ask them, politely, why they are engaging in hate speech aimed at you.

10. Wear your patriotic t-shirts, hats, and pins. Politely explain to people who ask what they represent.

All the information and contacts you need to do every one of these things can be found, for free, on a single website, called the Wisconsin Patriots Toolbox at https://wipatriotstoolbox.com. It also has a calendar of conservative events taking place throughout NE Wisconsin.

A list of thirty things you can do to help save America can also be found on the Wisconsin Patriots Toolbox website. It fits on a single page and in an easy-to-download PDF format so you can print out copies for yourself, family, and friends.

So now you have no more excuses. Go out and be a Super Patriot!

Norman Podhoretz at 92: We Are at War with the Left

By Joe Bast

I know of Norman Podhoretz mostly as the long-time editor of Commentary, a famous convert from liberalism to conservatism (or "neoconservatism") back in the 1960s, and a hawk on foreign policy. I met his son, John, a few times when we were both undergraduates at The University of Chicago. He has since become a notable Never Trumper. Honestly, I figured Norman had passed away, but here he is, at age 92, being interviewed by Charles Kesler in the Spring issue of Claremont Review of Books.

Early in the interview Podhoretz says "I am perfectly prepared to believe that the 2020 election may have been stolen," "I think [Trump] should run and I would support him if I thought he had a good chance of winning," and "I thought then [in 2016] that Donald Trump turned out to be the one person who had what it took to stand between [the Left] and the rest of us, which he did imperfectly, but he did it. He put the brakes on them, and he did a lot to expose what they were up to. And they did everything in their power to destroy him." On each of these points, I'm in total agreement with Podhoretz.

It gets even better: He says the New Left, which he helped found, believed "America is bad, but it's only bad because it's not living up to its ideals." Today's Left, in contrast, believes America per se is bad, has always been bad, and must be burned to the ground for its sins and replaced with something brand new.

The Left, says Podhoretz, "took the long march through the institutions," winding up in control of virtually all the major institutions in the country. "I never dreamed that the march would wind up so quickly where it wound up."

When people you know complain about how "polarized" the debate has become today, and wonder why Republicans and Democrats can't get along like they used to, try to remember these words from Podhoretz, who was "present at the creation": "What's happening today is that the gloves are off, the disguises are off, the leftists, black and white, talk now publicly the way they only used to talk privately, it's out in the open and there is a tiny bit of resistance being mounted recently, but only a tiny bit so far."

During the decades that I was in charge of a major conservative think tank I counselled staff not to attribute bad motives to the people who disagreed with us. We agree on the ultimate objectives, I would say – peace, prosperity, happiness -- but disagree on how to achieve them. That became a difficult stance to defend in the 2000s and by 2016 it was simply and demonstrably untrue. Podhoretz agrees: "I don't hesitate to use the word 'evil' in talking about the ideas and the people promulgating them who are trying their best to tear that precious system [created by the founders] down."

Podhoretz ends the interview with a solemn warning we should all take to heart: "We all have to face the fact that we are at war, albeit a cold civil war, and that this moment is not just an ordinary political disagreement in which we can all be partisan, etc. etc. All that, that's gone. God bless America is all I can say. Amen."

Big win today in Wisconsin Supreme Court Decision Banning Absentee Ballot Drop Boxes

By Ron Hoer

Today the Wisconsin Supreme Court in a 4-3 decision in Teigen v. Wisconsin Elections Commission, has determined that unmanned absentee ballot drop boxes are illegal under Wisconsin election law. This decision brings resolution to a key issue in the accusations of election bribery that originally arose in the state's November 2020 general election.

This ruling will now afford Wisconsin Voter Alliance (WVA) and Thomas More Society (TMS) attorney Kaardal to able to deliver wins to voters who have filed lawsuits about the drop boxes in the Circuit Courts of five counties, and who have accused the Wisconsin Election Commission Administrator Meagan Wolfe of violating her duties under Wisconsin election law.

Ballot Drop Boxes have been, and are, Unauthorized by Law, as Wisconsin Stat. § 6.87(4)(b)1. provides, in relevant part, that absentee ballots "shall be mailed by the elector, or delivered in person, to the municipal clerk issuing the ballot or ballots."

"This decision reveals just the tip of the iceberg of Wisconsin's election integrity problems," TMS attorney Erick Kaardal stated in response to the state's high court ruling. WVA and Kaardal called out very early in 2021 that the 21 page "Wisconsin Safe Voting Plan" between the Center for Tech and Civic Life and Wisconsin's five largest cities violated the state law banning absentee ballot drop boxes in the 2020 election.

Under the Center for Tech and Civic Life's "Wisconsin Safe Voting Plan" dated June 15, 2020, the Zuckerberg funded organization transferred $216,500 for absentee ballot drop boxes to be used in the five cities. The agreement signed by the center and the mayors of Milwaukee, Madison, Green Bay, Racine, and Kenosha, clearly states the intentions to purchase the legally unauthorized unmanned drop boxes. The illegal drop boxes were a part of the total scheme which included the Zuckerbucks funneled through the Center for Tech and Civic Life to fund "Get Out the Vote Campaigns" directed solely to minority communities in the five Wisconsin cities of Madison, Milwaukee, Kenosha, Racine and Green Bay.

The worst part of all of this is it was all coordinated with the blessing of the Wisconsin Elections Commission. From correspondence we have received through open records requests, it is obvious there was planning, cooperation, and collusion between the Center for Tech and Civic Life, the Wisconsin Elections Commission, and the Wisconsin 5 mayors who worked in concert to purchase and use the illegal drop boxes in the November 2020 election. Now, all the Wisconsin state courts need to do to clean up Wisconsin elections is to follow the money associated with the privately financed legally unauthorized drop boxes.

"Yes, the 2020 election is over and done with," Kaardal observed, "But it is incumbent upon us to ensure that the corruption that infected Wisconsin's voting process in November 2020 is rooted out and that the state's election integrity is preserved. It is especially important that the Wisconsin Election Commission, the entity charged with safeguarding the state's election integrity, be above reproach. Wisconsin's voters deserve to know the truth and they need to be assured that the corruption has been eliminated, allowing for fair and honest elections from this point forward."

As you may be aware, twenty states have now passed legislation to ban or regulate the acceptance and use of private funds by public election officials. The Wisconsin legislature passed a ban on private money funding of election administration, but it was vetoed by Gov. Tony Evers. WVA continues to work with individual counties and cities to pass local ordinances to ban the acceptance of private money for elections. Most notably, Brown County (where Green Bay is), and Kenosha County boards are in the final stages of passing ordinances banning private money from elections.

National Education Association teachers union proposes resolution to change 'mother' to 'birthing parent'

Tiffany Justice from Moms for Liberty said she refers to the NEA as the 'K-12 Cartel' for holding parents and children hostage to a radical agenda

The National Education Association proposed a resolution that would change the word "mother" in contracts to "birthing parent" for the purpose of being inclusive to the LGBTQIA+ community.

NEA's resolutions, called new business items (NBI) represent the teachers' union's opinions and beliefs. Many resolutions were voted by the Representative Assembly (RA), comprised of 6,000 educators, in Chicago as well as virtually. The resolution on the language change – NBI 63 – was ultimately not brought to a vote.

"Using this contract language, members need not worry about how a Board of Education/ solicitor defines 'maternity leave,' 'mother,' and/or 'father'; the language is an inclusive reflection of how LGBTQIA+ members build families," the proposed resolution said.

NBI's are proposed by the union's delegates. It takes 50 delegate sponsors to bring the NBI to the RA floor for debate and then to a vote, according to Education Week.

Tiffany Justice of Moms for Liberty told Fox News Digital that she is now calling the NEA the "K-12 Cartel" because they are holding parents and children hostage to a radical agenda.

"We believe in American teachers, and we don't believe that the lack of focus that the union has on children is represented," she said.

"Normal people don't use the term chestfeeding or birthing person or any of this stuff," Nicole Neily of Parents Defending Education said. "I think it just further underscores how completely out of touch the teachers' unions… are from the concerns of normal parents."

"It's horrifying," she told Fox News Digital.

Elana Fishbein from No Left Turn in Education said the proposed resolution represents how the left wants to destroy the family.

"They are arrogant. They are dismissive of the family, the parents. It's beyond Orwellian. Even in science fiction, I don't know if you can have such a script of complete destruction of human society," she said.

NEA delegates struck down a proposed resolution that would support a "national policy of mandatory masking and COVID vaccines in schools." A similar NEA resolution was proposed last year and was also scrapped by delegate voters.

Past year's resolutions included support for reparations.

"The Association acknowledges that both historical and current practices have systematically advantaged and privileged people of White European ancestry while disadvantaging and denying rights, opportunities, and equality for people of color," a resolution on racial justice said.

Another resolution called for educators to fight back against "institutionally racist systems."

"The National Education Association believes that, in order to achieve racial and social justice, educators must acknowledge the existence of white supremacy culture as a primary root cause of institutional racism, structural racism, and white privilege," the resolution said.

"The Association believes that school districts must provide training in cultural competence, implicit bias, restorative practices and techniques, and racial justice," it continued.

One resolution called for the protection of the rights of the accused in child abuse cases. "Any such allegation should be investigated and resolved immediately without name disclosure," the resolution on allegations against employees said. "The National Education Association believes education employees should be protected from allegations of child abuse made in bad faith."

The NEA released the following statement to Fox News Digital: "Every year, NEA members submit New Business Items concerning a wide range of issues. Some are intimately tied to NEA operations and others reflect policy positions delegates would like the organization and its state-level affiliates to take. NEA is committed to democratic processes and open debate. These values are fundamental not just to NEA's vision as a union but to our functioning as a multiracial democracy. NBI 63 was not considered by the 2022 NEA RA."

Editor's Note: The article was updated with a statement from the NEA.

Constitution Party of Wisconsin
Date: July 1, 2022

Ripon – June 24, 2022 marked the Supreme Court of the United States' overturning of its 1973 Roe v. Wade decision. More than 60 million innocent, defenseless children were aborted during that nearly 50-year time period. Recognizing the Constitutional requirement in the 10th Amendment, for the power to declare laws or decrees not granted to them, as reserved for the States or the people, they have recognized that States all along had the power make laws to criminalize abortion. States should have used their authority to nullify unconstitutional and immoral rulings, from the beginning of Roe, which would have saved millions of lives.

The Constitution Party of Wisconsin applauds the overturning of Roe, but in so doing, they should have reversed it completely, by recognizing that abortion is murder and no State has the right to murder a child before, or after birth. This would be based on the principle of equality under the law and specifically, according to the right to life of all innocent human beings, as stated in our Declaration of Independence as a nation, and that no one has the authority to take an innocent life without due process of law, as stated in the 5th and 14th Amendments of the U.S. Constitution.

State Statute, 940.04, must be enforced now and amended to abolish all surgical and chemical abortions. The same penalty for murdering a child before birth, should be applied to murdering a child after birth. This is fundamental to equality under the law and the recognition that all human life is made in our Creator God's image and likeness.

The Constitution Party of Wisconsin will continue to work to find and elect leaders with courage and commitment to protect all human life and write laws to hold their murderers accountable.

The Constitution Party of Wisconsin

America is NOT a democracy!

In 1787, when leaving the Constitution Convention, delegate Benjamin Franklin was asked by a Mrs. Powell, "Well, Doctor, what have you given us, a republic or a monarchy?" Without hesitation, Franklin answered, "A republic, if you can keep it."

When the Framers were having heated debates at Independence Hall about the wording of the amendments and what form of government they wanted, they chose a republic. The Framers knew what democracy was – that is why they did NOT want it. They loved the new nation they fought for too much to curse it with a democratic form of government. Here are some of their cautionary words –

Alexander Hamilton – "...our real disease; which is democracy..."

John Adams – "Remember, democracy never lasts long. It soon wastes, exhausts and murders itself. There is never a democracy that did not commit suicide."

James Madison – The Father of the Constitution, wrote in Federalist Paper No. 10 that pure democracies "...have ever been spectacles of turbulence and contention; have ever been incompatible with personal security or the rights of property; and have in general been as short in their lives as they have been violent in their deaths."

Supreme Court victory on "Clean Power Plan"

By Craig Rucker

When it rains it pours..It seems this week the good news just keeps coming from the nation's highest court for those who value freedom and sound science.

The Supreme Court ruled that EPA exceeded its authority under The Clean Air Act when it promulgated the so-called "Clean Power Plan."

The Clean Power Plan was designed to reduce CO2 emissions by changing the way Americans generate electricity.

The problem? EPA was not only wrong in its approach, but Congress delegated it no such authority.

READ THE FULL SUPREME COURT DECISION IN WEST VIRGINIA V. EPA AT CFACT.org.

This is a major win.

Gina McCarthy was President Obama's EPA Administrator. Today she serves as President Biden's "climate czar." Her Clean Power Plan became a notorious example of bureaucratic overreach. It would raise energy prices and damage the economy, while having little or no meaningful impact on the temperature of the Earth. It would negatively impact our daily lives and freedoms in ways Congress never intended.

The Supreme Court voted 6 to 3 to strike it down.

Chief Justice John Roberts, writing for the court, is clear. We posted the full decision with key excerpts to CFACT.org:

"The only question before the Court… is whether the "best system of emission reduction identified by EPA in the Clean Power Plan was within the authority granted to the Agency in Section 111(d) of the Clean Air Act.For the reasons given, the answer is no."

The message is clear. Regulatory agencies must operate within the authority granted them by law. They must not exceed that authority.

This is fundamental. Thank God we have a court that understands this clearly.

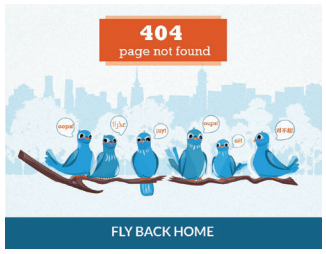
UN pulls the essay from its website on July 6, 2022!

The UN Chronicle issued this statement via Twitter: "This article appeared in the UN Chronicle 14 years ago as an attempt at satire and was never meant to be taken literally. We have been made aware of its failures, even as satire, and have removed it from our site."



UN pulls article touting hunger after Climate Depot exposes

By Craig Rucker

What would the world do without the poor and hungry?

For most of us, this would be a cause for celebration. Not so for our would-be masters at the United Nations, however.

To them the poor are a potential "asset" to carry out economic tasks. Maybe not everyone at their Geneva HQ agrees, but at least that was the gist of what was posted in one of their major publications called the UN Chronicle -- that is until CFACT's Climate Depot called out the outrageous article and the UN quickly pulled it.

CFACT's Marc Morano reports: "The UN Chronicle…originally published this essay in 2008 by Professor George Kent:

"'Hunger has great positive value to many people. Indeed, it is fundamental to the working of the world's economy. Hungry people are the most productive people, especially where there is a need for manual labour...How many of us would sell our services if it were not for the threat of hunger?

'For those of us at the high end of the social ladder, ending hunger globally would be a disaster. If there were no hunger in the world, who would plow the fields? Who would harvest our vegetables? Who would work in the rendering plants? Who would clean our toilets? We would have to produce our own food and clean our own toilets. No wonder people at the high end are not rushing to solve the hunger problem. For many of us, hunger is not a problem, but an asset.'"

So why did the UN pull their article after CFACT's Morano publicized it?

The UN Chronicle's Twitter account claims the article was meant to be "satire," and they removed it because they "have been made aware of its failures, even as satire."

Yet Professor Kent, the author of the piece, told Morano that the article was absolutely not satire, and was meant to be "provocative."

From our perspective, if it was meant to be "satire" it wasn't funny, and if it was meant to be "provocative" it was in poor taste.

Either way, kudos to CFACT's Morano for getting this story out there.

United Nations | UN Chronicle

The Benefits of World Hunger

About the author
George Kent

By Professor George Kent in 2008. The University of Hawaii. Published in UN Chronicle in 2008 & 2009.

We sometimes talk about hunger in the world as if it were a scourge that all of us want to see abolished, viewing it as comparable with the plague or aids. But that naïve view prevents us from coming to grips with what causes and sustains hunger. Hunger has great positive value to many people. Indeed, it is fundamental to the working of the world's economy. Hungry people are the most productive people, especially where there is a need for manual labour.

We in developed countries sometimes see poor people by the roadside holding up signs saying "Will Work for Food". Actually, most people work for food. It is mainly because people need food to survive that they work so hard either in producing food for themselves in subsistence-level production, or by selling their services to others in exchange for money. How many of us would sell our services if it were not for the threat of hunger?

More importantly, how many of us would sell our services so cheaply if it were not for the threat of hunger? When we sell our services cheaply, we enrich others, those who own the factories, the machines and the lands, and ultimately own the people who work for them. For those who depend on the availability of cheap labour, hunger is the foundation of their wealth.

The conventional thinking is that hunger is caused by low-paying jobs. For example, an article reports on "Brazil's ethanol slaves: 200,000 migrant sugar cutters who prop up renewable energy boom".1 While it is true that hunger is caused by low-paying jobs, we need to understand that hunger at the same time causes low-paying jobs to be created. Who would have established massive biofuel production operations in Brazil if they did not know there were thousands of hungry people desperate enough to take the awful jobs they would offer? Who would build any sort of factory if they did not know that many people would be available to take the jobs at low-pay rates?

Much of the hunger literature talks about how it is important to assure that people are well fed so that they can be more productive. That is nonsense. No one works harder than hungry people. Yes, people who are well nourished have greater capacity for productive physical activity, but well-nourished people are far less willing to do that work.

The non-governmental organization Free the Slaves defines slaves as people who are not allowed to walk away from their jobs. It estimates that there are about 27 million slaves in the world,2 including those who are literally locked into workrooms and held as bonded labourers in South Asia. However, they do not include people who might be described as slaves to hunger, that is, those who are free to walk away from their jobs but have nothing better to go to. Maybe most people who work are slaves to hunger?

For those of us at the high end of the social ladder, ending hunger globally would be a disaster. If there were no hunger in the world, who would plow the fields? Who would harvest our vegetables? Who would work in the rendering plants? Who would clean our toilets? We would have to produce our own food and clean our own toilets. No wonder people at the high end are not rushing to solve the hunger problem. For many of us, hunger is not a problem, but an asset.

At age 16, Thomas's grandfather sent him to an all-white Catholic boarding school staffed by nuns in Savannah, where he made excellent grades and played on the football team.

Following high school graduation in 1967, Thomas's grandfather next sent him to Immaculate Conception Seminary in northwestern Missouri.

A racist remark he overheard there about the assassination of Martin Luther King Jr. influenced him to decide not to become a priest.

Thomas left the seminary and enrolled at Holy Cross college in Worcester, Massachusetts, where he participated on the track team, did volunteer work in the community, and helped found the school's Black Student Union.

Thanks to his excellent Holy Cross academic record, Thomas was approved for admission to law schools at Harvard, the University of Pennsylvania and Yale. He chose the latter — largely due to financial support it offered to him as part of its affirmative action policy — and continued to excel in his studies.

Upon graduating from Yale Law School in 1974, Clarence Thomas accepted a position on the staff of Missouri's Republican attorney general, "Jack" Danforth, who after becoming elected as U.S. Senator, appointed him his Washington, D.C. legislative assistant.

Thomas's conservative ideas soon caught the attention of the Ronald Reagan administration, which in 1981 appointed him assistant secretary for civil rights in the U.S. Department of Education where he openly advocated that minority groups, like everyone, must succeed based upon merit.

President George H.W. Bush appointed Thomas to the Washington, D.C. circuit of the U.S. Court of Appeals in 1990; then soon nominated him to replace retiring Supreme Court Justice Thurgood Marshall the following year.

Senate hearings to confirm Thomas's nomination were savagely disrupted by televised show trial allegations of African-American Anita Hill, his former special assistant in the U.S. Department of Education civil rights office, who accused him of sexual harassment.

Nevertheless, Hill had continued to contact Thomas voluntarily even after he helped arrange for her subsequent appointment as a law professor at the University of Oklahoma.

Denying any wrongdoing, Thomas emotionally characterized the televised ordeal as a "high-tech lynching for uppity Blacks who in any way deign to think for themselves, to do for themselves, to have different ideas."

Thomas added: "it is a message that unless you kowtow to an old order, this is what will happen to you. You will be lynched, destroyed, caricatured, by a committee of the U.S. Senate, rather than hung from a tree."

That sad Senate spectacle was chaired by Joe Biden who then said: "Sexual harassment is a serious matter and, in my view, any person guilty of this offense is unsuited to serve not only on the nation's highest court but any position of responsibility, of higher responsibility in or out of government."

That justice standard clearly didn't apply during the 2020 presidential election campaign when Tara Reade, a former staffer in Joe Biden's U.S. Senate office, alleged that he sexually assaulted her in 1993 in a Capitol Hill office.

Although Reade had previously filed her charges in a formal police report at the time of the alleged incident, mainstream media showed no interest in her claim whatsoever.

Sen. Biden's personal and public background diametrically contrasted from the man his Senate Judiciary hearings were purposefully maligning in a great many ways.

Joseph Robinette Biden, Jr., the first of four siblings, was born on November 20, 1942, in blue-collar Scranton, Pennsylvania, moving with his family to the Wilmington, Delaware area at age 10 where his father found work as a car salesman.

Like Clarence Thomas, Joe attended Catholic schools, including Archmere Academy, an elite private preparatory high school. Unlike Thomas, however, Biden reportedly received mediocre grades.

Upon graduation from high school, Biden attended the University of Delaware (UD) where he double majored in political science and history, played on the freshman football team, and became the president of his freshman class.

In his autobiography "Promises to Keep: On Life and Politics," Biden notes struggling academically at UD, a circumstance he attributed to being a "little too interested in football and meeting new girls."

Despite lackluster grades, Joe managed to get accepted to Syracuse University College of Law where he graduated 76th out of a law school class of 85 with a "C" average, and had faced disciplinary action on a charge of plagiarizing part of a fellow student's law school paper.

Bogus statements and gaffs have plagued Joe Biden's entire political career.

Biden dropped out of his earlier 1988 presidential run after also being caught lifting unattributed quotations from speeches by other politicians, including Robert F. Kennedy, Hubert H. Humphrey, and British Labor Party leader Neil Kinnock.

Campaigning as pro-civil rights presidential candidate in 1987, Biden blatantly lied to a New Hampshire audience about having "marched in the civil rights movement."

In 2010, then-Sen. Biden eulogized his former Ku Klux Klan leader friend Sen. Robert Byrd whom he described as "fiercely devoted to his principles," a "friend," "mentor" and a "guide."

Ten years earlier, in 1977, Sen. Biden had fought bussing to desegregate schools, and worried that it would cause his children to "grow up in a racial jungle."

The stark contrast between now Supreme Court Justice Thomas and President Biden continues.

Whereas Justice Thomas's legal essays and written arguments supporting his opinions are clear, well researched, and consistent, Biden's tele-prompted messaging follows and equivocates each most recent self-inflicted policy disaster.

America has chosen both wisely and foolishly.

Trump Justices Saved the Babies

The Never Trumpers supported Hillary. Never forget that if they had their way this day would have never happened. The Never Trumpers deserve scorn and to be never heard from again. With Roe v Wade being overturned, it is illegal in Wisconsin to have an abortion. There is only an exception for the life of the mother. Planned Parenthood has canceled all abortion procedures in the state of Wisconsin. Be mindful that Speaker Robin Vos supports expanding exceptions to Wisconsin's 1849 Pro-Life law. We will keep you updated on any threats coming from Republicans or Democrats.

By Fr. Dennis Saran

Beloved,

I have had the opportunity to digest not only the Supreme Court ruling, but the public reaction as well. I gave a homily on my thoughts this last weekend, but it was only to the 7:30 AM crowd, so there was a fair number of parishioners who did not hear it. Let me start with this, from the Declaration of Independence, "We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable Rights, that among these are Life, Liberty and the pursuit of Happiness."

Here in lies the problem as I see it. Many people in our country would not agree with this declaration any more. There would be two issues with them, that these truths are self-evident, and most importantly, that they have been endowed to us by our Creator. The division in our country, from a Catholic viewpoint, has to do with the foundation of our culture and what one believes drives it. There are three and only three ways a civilized culture can exist. The first is what our Founders Father's believed, what we as Catholic's believe. This is called a theonomy, a system where there exists truth, and that truth comes from God. We can discern this truth through the bible, traditions, our rational minds, and through revelation. We call this Natural Law- the truth known to us in our hearts. One of these truths is that we believe that we were all made in the image of God. It is from containing that image that each of us has equal dignity, independent of whoever we are, and however important we are to this world. This is a foundational principal which holds that the unborn, the aged, all carry equal dignity and equal right to life. We who believe we exist in a theonomy, see words such as freedom, rights, and privacy, as all in relationship to God. When we are following God's truth, we are enjoying maximum freedom. When human dignity, as a right exists, it means we cannot end the life of an unborn child. Their value is not superseded by the "rights of the mother."

The second way a culture can exist is a heteronomous society. This is a culture where individual autonomy is co-opted to an individual or group. This group then decides what 'truth' is. They decide the rules and have the power of force to affect compliance. We can quickly think of many cultures to which his type of society exists, where the few rule the many. It may produce an orderly society, but the very freedoms our Founding Father's professed, are lost. Our country was not founded on this type of society, in fact our Founding Father's warned against it. Over the last several decades, however, many would say we have degenerated into this type of culture. In this culture, the only important commodity is power and to become that small group of rulers. Even in the days of King David, this was often done by murdering the competition. We haven't evolved much past this. The ruling party often promotes violence to keep on top. While those in power may revert to animal like behaviors to maintain their power, the image they wish to project to the rest of us is one of benevolence and are making these rules "for your good." When we fall into this type of culture, the same words we use develop different meaning, 'freedom' becomes the ability to do what they let you. 'Rights' means what the leaders in power determine you have. 'Privacy' becomes a crime. This is the default society when God is taken out of the picture. Truth becomes malleable, and any disagreement becomes a threat or just misinformation. While most people would say that they do not wish to be governed in this type of society, if they are the group in power, they find it just fine. You can certainly see this type of culture playing out in our society right now.

The final way a culture can exist is an autonomous one. This is a society where your "truth" is as good as mine. We are to co-exist (just like the bumper says) and my truth holds no superior place over yours. While many would say this sounds great, and this is how our godless culture exists, even on a cursory level one can see this type of society, unless there is no interaction between you and me, is untenable. If we are to be a society, some of my ideas and beliefs cannot be tolerated and some of yours cannot as well. Who decides? Well, if there is no objective truth from God, it ends up being who is the stronger and we fall back into a heteronomous society. The meaning of the words change again, than 'freedom' becomes the ability to do whatever I want, but not if it crosses you. 'Rights' become whatever I decide I am entitled to possess. Autonomous societies sound good, you do your thing and I do mine, but in reality they do not exist.

You can see the fundamental problem, and it is language. Depending on what you believe, the meaning of the words you so strongly support changes. Which leads me to my first recommendation. We cannot, as Catholics, just sit on the sidelines and let the cultural chaos continue. To help, each of us needs to understand very clearly what I have just written, and when challenged, the first question that needs to be made clear is, "In what society are you asking this question?" If the challenger will not admit we live in a theonomy, then you can be clear that the terms, freedom, rights, and privacy, will have different meaning. Second, our definition of freedom is not to do what I want, but to do what I ought. Be good, strive to follow God. Make your life an example of what Christian freedom looks like. Finally, be optimistic, we as Christians acknowledge and own the truth given to us by God. It is a great gift and it leads to life, liberty, and happiness. Be positive, do not engage in word battles when the conversation doesn't exist on the same playing field.

people and their elected representatives," from whom Roe v. Wade had removed it, contrary to the dictates of the U.S. Constitution.

Thus the attempt to intimidate the Justices of the Supreme Court, which began with the malicious leak of the draft of the decision by members of the pro-abortion lobby, has failed, just as the rhetoric of death of the Democrat left, fueled by extremist movements and groups financed by George Soros' Open Society, has also failed. And it is significant to see how violent and intolerant the reaction has been from self-styled liberals, from Barack and Michelle Obama to Hillary Clinton, from Nancy Pelosi to Chuck Schumer, from the Attorney General Merrick Garland to Joe Biden, not to mention the declarations of politicians and heads of state from across the Western world.

Actually, the following ought to be enough to make people understand the importance of this decision: attacks carried out by "pro-choice" groups, assaults against pro-life organizations, the desecration of churches, scenes of hysteria on the part of supporters of the right to kill the innocent life of the unborn child, emblematically uniting members of the Democratic party financed by Planned Parenthood, which in turn is financed by the government; the Woke Left; the followers of Klaus Schwab's globalism; members of international Freemasonry; ideologues of green change and demographic reduction; propagandists of gender theory, LGBTQ+ ideology, and rainbow flags; adherents of the church of Satan, who consider abortion as one of their "rites" of worship; those who harvest and sell human fetuses from the death clinics; those who sell "vaccines" produced by human fetuses; and those who support the pandemic farce and their grotesque train of "experts," all of whom agree that their cultural hegemony is now threatened, a hegemony that since 1973 has caused the death of 63 million children in the United States, who have been offered in human sacrifice to the Moloch of political correctness.

The globalist world, which has made the systematic violation of the human body its own ideological flag by imposing an experimental gene treatment on the population against all scientific evidence, is now tearing its garments as it claims the right of women's bodily autonomy and the right to kill the life the mother bears in her womb.

This globalist world, in which an elite group of subversive criminals has seized power and ascended to the heights of power in nations and international institutions, has now lost control of the United States of America, thanks to a historic decision handed down by wise justices, including the ones most recently appointed by President Donald Trump, whose commitment to the defense of the sanctity of human life has today achieved a great victory for America and for those who look to her as a model to imitate. Many American states have already declared abortion illegal, and thanks to the decision of the Supreme Court they will finally be able to recognize and protect the rights of the unborn child.

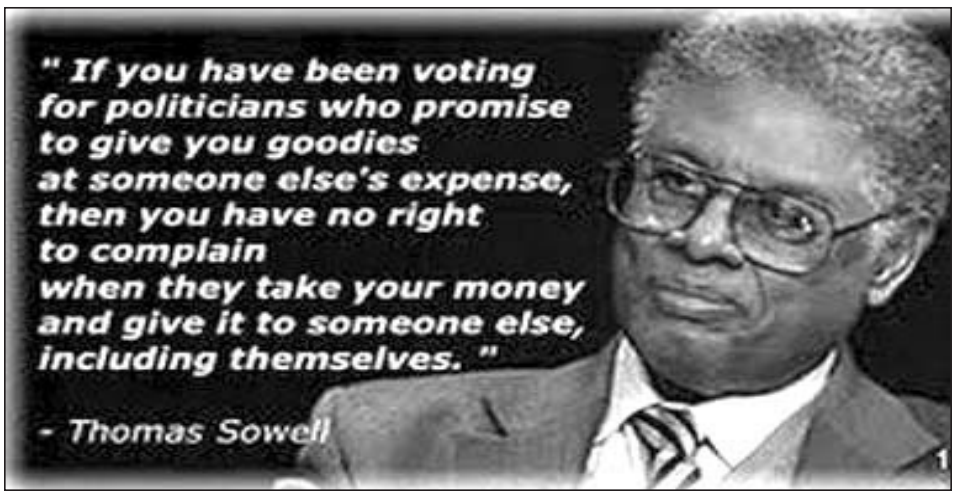
The Vatican Press Office as well as the U.S. Bishops' Conference are reacting to this historic day with a suspicious moderation, as if it is an embarrassing duty for them. Bergoglio is silent, but he was very talkative when it came to attacking Donald Trump or supporting Hillary Clinton, Joe Biden, and Democratic candidates.

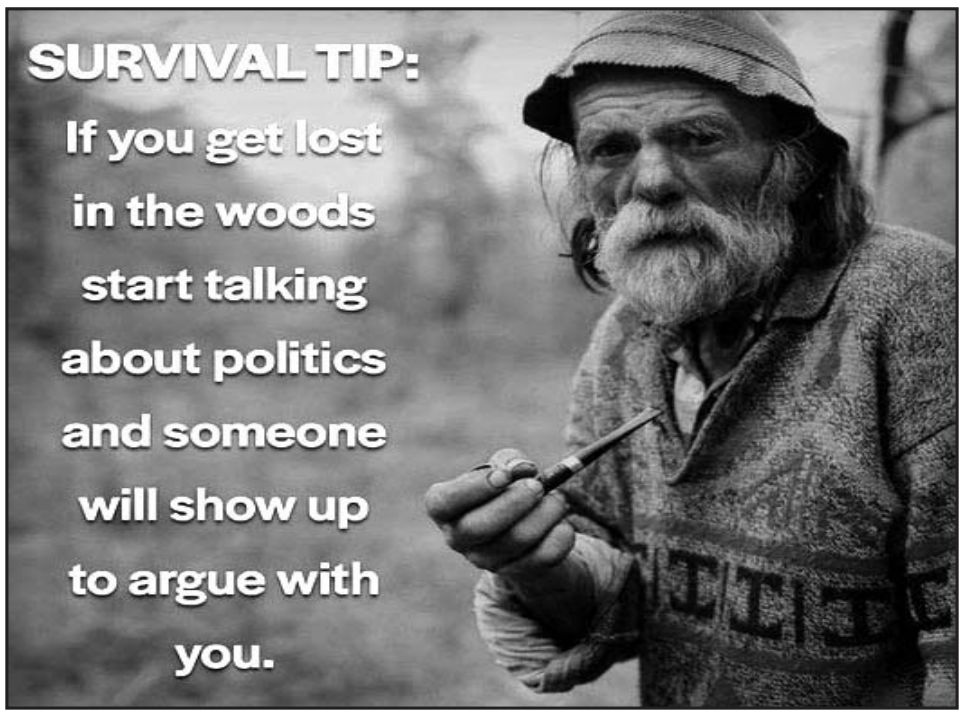
His silence in the face of the victory of the good over the ideology of death of the world without God still echoes the propaganda of the Bergoglian church in support of the so-called vaccines and the Agenda 2030 of the UN, which is one of the main proponents of "reproductive health" that has been imposed on nations precisely since 1973 with Roe v. Wade. Nor should we forget how the Pontifical Academy for Life, founded by John Paul II, has been disfigured over the last ten years by including members who are notoriously in favor of abortion and contraception.

This hatred of President Trump and the network of the deep church's connections and interests with the deep state have brought to light, among other things, the great contradiction of the Bergoglian church, which is committed to doing business with global high finance and the pharmaceutical companies, even as economic and sexual scandals continue to emerge that involve both politicians and prelates.

On the day on which the Church celebrates the feast of the Most Sacred Heart of Jesus, and also the Birth of Saint John the Baptist, who "leapt in the womb" of his mother Elizabeth (Luke 1:41), the Lord has desired to grant to the United States of America the possibility of redeeming itself, ensuring that its man-made laws are coherent with the natural law impressed by the Creator in the heart of every person. And this is the essential basis that is necessary for a Nation to be blessed by Heaven. One Nation under God.

I hope that the American people will know how to treasure this historic opportunity, and that they will understand that there cannot be justice anywhere the right to abortion is recognized, there cannot be peace and prosperity in a society that massacres its own children, and there cannot be liberty wherever license, vice and pride subvert God's Commandments.





Being Blackrocked

government policy, and international relations." And thus, they "have constructed a system that will enable them to seize the "global commons (ed: control of the entire world). "[1]

This transfer of power "destroyed the check and balances in the Constitution at the local level, and therefore destroy(ed) representative government. This power shift is a philosophical shift to a completely new form of government. It is a merger between government, corporations, and non-governmental organizations.[2] This established Public/Private Partnerships (PPP) to become the new nucleus of the government. The Preamble to the Earth Summit/Agenda 21, stated flat-out that Public Private Partnerships were the future. And the Earth Summit/ Agenda 21, p. 15 tells us that "Government, business and industry, including transnational corporations, strengthen partnerships to implement the principles and criteria for sustainable development."

Now that 30-some years have passed since the Globalists began putting this into effect, we are seeing the results – and they are hideous and overwhelming. The PPPs have morphed into one Global Public/Private Partnership (GPPP), too big to fail — they hope. The term "too big to fail" is used to describe a company that's "so entwined in the global economy that its failure would be catastrophic" If it doesn't fail, it will be the end of civilization on this earth. But it will fail. There are too many power-hungry maniacs running things; there will be fights on who's "king of the mountain", who's in charge today. When it fails, it will still be an ugly and dangerous world, but not one in which tyrants will be in control of every area of our lives. But let's look at what the GPPP is now.

The Global Public/Private Partnership is a network of the world's stakeholder capitalists. What is stakeholder capitalism? It is the notion that "a firm focuses on meeting the needs of all its stakeholders: customers, employees, partners, the community, and society as a whole". Dream on. You and I, and the customers, employees, the community, and society as a whole (if that were even possible), are not, and never will be, stakeholders. The stakeholders are those rich men and women, those who run the central banks and a few government leaders. No ordinary people allowed! Think about it; it is impossible to meet the needs of all its stakeholders that they list – unless those stakeholders are told what they want, i.e., "you will own nothing and be happy". That is the only way this can work; there are too many competing interests with that large a sphere of categories to cater to.

The stakeholders of the GPPP are global corporations, central banks, governments, billionaire foundations, think-tanks, major academic and scientific institutions, non-governmental organizations, and even labor unions. What entity did they leave out? Uh, we citizens. We will have no say (not that we have much now). Not that the governments that are considered their stakeholder partners have any say either. If you look at the U.S., you can see that the government bureaucrats hold all the power of Congress; while the executive branch is controlling those entities, the Globalists (with the Deep State) are controlling the executive.

Free-market capitalism has been dominant in the Western world since the breakup of feudalism, in which most means of production are privately owned, production is guided, and income is distributed largely through the operation of markets. And history shows that free-market capitalism has been the best economic system ever yet devised. We have not been living under a free-market system for decades; it has been gradually morphed into what we have today, a corrupted, manipulated, and controlled mess with no central structure and a monetary system with nothing to back it. And most or all of the world's economic systems are on the verge of collapse. A planned collapse so the GPPP can step in and take over. "Since the creation of the US Federal Reserve over a century ago, every major financial market collapse has been deliberately triggered for political motives by the central bank. . .. today the US Fed is acting with its interest rate weapon (another tool of asymmetrical warfare) what is the greatest speculative financial bubble in human history, a bubble it created) [3]. All to create globalism.

Right now, we are dealing with severe land-use and housing regulations that are forcing people into cities (now called human habitats – as opposed to the rural areas which are to become part of the animal habitat). Single-family homes are considered damaging for the environment (see Sustainable by Tom DeWeese) so people need to be urged (driven) out of them and into Stack-n-Pack housing (see The Ideal Communist City). [4] Calling suburbia "sprawl" to denigrate big yards and neighborhoods with yards, barbeques, and lots of kids running around, is another tool of asymmetrical warfare. But many, if not most, of those living in suburbia in their single-family homes are middle class; the backbone of America building on the American Dream. Those desiring to own a home are finding fewer available, so they are losing a chance to build equity. Economic freedom is at stake, and with it free-market capitalism – a cornerstone of American liberty.

Now, let's look at probably the most dangerous Global Public Private Partner, BlackRock. It is the world's single most powerful financial institution with assets now at 9.6 trillion dollars. As Tucker Carlson said, "… that fact gives the CEO, Larry Fink, unparalleled control over the U.S. economy". Not a pleasant thought that one person has so much power. BlackRock advises central banks and has connections with state leaders of the world. Apple and Microsoft are just two of their investments. BlackRock established a new investment fund in China; the first owned entirely by a foreign firm. Chinese investors have put a billion dollars into it. It has already attracted over 111,000 investors.

But I want to focus on BlackRock's investing here in the U.S. – pensions and property. Re pensions: Consumers' Research is warning that BlackRock is taking pension funds that are invested through BlackRock and putting that money into investments in China. As Consumers' Research states, "What we've seen is that while BlackRock is virtue signaling[5] in the U.S., they're aiding our adversaries with American pension dollars." They also list the ten states whose "public pension funds are most deeply invested in Blackrock: Washington, Florida, New York, Nevada, South Carolina, Oklahoma, Pennsylvania, Montana, and West Virginia."

What about property? We at American Policy Center have been writing and speaking for years about how the world's bureaucrats have been making laws, regulations, rules, and reinventing governments to establish Agenda 21 through the U.N., World Economic Forum (WEF), and the GPPP. One of the many outcomes of a completed Agenda21/2030 world would be "no private property".

The federal government (i.e., Deep State and Globalists running D.C.) incentivized Wall Street to get into the housing market. "In early 2012, it launched a pilot program that allowed private investors to easily purchase foreclosed homes by the hundreds from the government agency Fannie Mae. These new owners would then rent out the homes, creating more housing in areas heavily hit by foreclosures." [6]

Sounds great; government has the answer. Wait. The renters of these single-family homes have discovered that a big, deep-pocket company as landlord isn't all it's cracked up to be. And the companies are finding out that, while they may consider these homes are, basically, cookie cutter homes and the tenants are cookie cutter tenants, life may work that way in technocracy, but it doesn't in real life. But the tenants are the ones paying for the glitches. (See the Atlantic article on Wall Street landlords. [7] That was last year; then BlackRock was a minor figure in real estate.

BlackRock is now aiming to become one of the largest landlords in the U.S.; they already own $34 billion in real estate here. And more than half of our country's properties are owned by institutional investors (BlackRock and other stakeholders of the GPPP). According to the New York Times,

Abp. Viganò: Freemasonry is using the WHO and the 'Bergoglian church' to advance its global coup

By Archbishop Carlo Maria Viganò

Armando Manocchia: Your Excellency, [Here in Italy] we are now in economic and financial bankruptcy, where the public debt is now over 2.7 billion euros. In my opinion the problem is the moral and ethical bankruptcy not only of the ruling class but also of a significant part of the population. What can we do to reconstruct a social fabric that includes an ethical and moral sense?

Archbishop Viganò: Bankruptcy is the inevitable result of multiple factors. The first is the transfer of the monetary sovereignty of individual nations to a supranational body such as the European Union. The European Central Bank is a private bank, lending money at interest rates to member states, forcing them into perpetual indebtedness. I recall, en passant, that the European Central Bank is officially owned by the Central Banks of the nations that are part of it; therefore, since the Central Banks are controlled by private companies, the ECB itself is essentially a private company, and acts as such.

The second factor is seigniorage, that is, the income that the Central Bank derives from the issuance of money on behalf of the state, which borrows with it not for the material cost of printing banknotes, but for their nominal value: a theft to the detriment of the community, because the money belongs to the citizens and not to a private subject composed of private banks.

The third factor lies in the economic and financial policy of the European Union, which imposes loans at interest by granting the funds that individual nations have previously paid. Italy, which is a net contributor, thus finds itself having to anticipate billions on which it not only does not receive interest, but which are returned to it for usury as if they were not its own.

The fourth factor is due to the wretched fiscal policies of recent [Italian] administrations, on the peremptory order of the Troika, namely the International Monetary Fund, the European Commission and the European Central Bank, which are official creditors of the member countries. The substantial tax exemption of large financial and business groups and the harassment of small businesses are the basis of the progressive impoverishment of the country and the failure of many activities, with the consequent increase in unemployment and the creation of cheap labor. And let's not forget that it is always the European Union that imposes the so-called reforms, based on a false narrative – think of global warming or overpopulation – with the blackmail of the loans it has made to member countries: gender equality and other horrors have been introduced into national legislations without any consultation of citizens, indeed knowing full well that they were against it.

Finally, the subversive action of the U.N. Agenda 2030 – that is, the Great Reset of the World Economic Forum – has as its declared purpose the transfer of the wealth of nations and individuals to large investment funds managed by the globalist mafia. This subversive operation must be denounced and prosecuted by the magistrates, because it constitutes a true silent coup against the community.

I would, however, like to point out that the economic aspect is only one means of achieving far more worrying goals, such as total control of the world's population and its enslavement: if citizens are deprived of home ownership; if they are prevented from having freedom of enterprise; if endemic unemployment is caused and increased by uncontrolled immigration and health emergencies, reducing labor costs; if Italians are harassed with exorbitant taxes; if the traditional family is penalized by making it practically impossible for two young people to marry and have children; if education is destroyed beginning in elementary school and the cultural vacuum is created by frustrating the talent of individuals; if the history of our native land is cancelled and the glorious heritage that made Italy great is denied in the name of inclusiveness and the renunciation of our national identity, what can one expect, if not a society without a future, without hopes, without the desire to fight and engage?

In order to rebuild the social fabric, it is essential first of all to have awareness of the coup d'état that is currently in progress, carried out with the complicity of those who rule and the entire political class. Understanding that we have been robbed of our inalienable rights by an international criminal organization is the first, indispensable step to take. Once this is understood, especially by the healthy side of the institutions and the judiciary, it will be possible to try the traitors who made this silent coup possible, banishing them forever from the political scene. Obviously, Italy will have to regain its sovereignty, first of all by leaving the European Union.

A Manocchia: In this work of reconstruction, in which the Anti-Globalist Alliance you have initiated will play a decisive role, what will be the first initiatives to be launched?

Archbishop Viganò: It will be necessary to implement a far-sighted and wide-ranging project, which has as its purpose the intellectual, scientific, cultural, political and even religious formation of the future ruling class, endowing it with the capacity for critical judgment and firm moral references. Schools and foundations will have to be set up from which will emerge a ruling class of righteous citizens, honest rulers, and entrepreneurs who know how to reconcile the legitimate demands of profit with workers' rights and consumer protection.

Those who hold public office, like every honest citizen, must be aware that they have responsibility before God for what they do, and that they must put the common good before personal interest, if they want to sanctify themselves in the role that the Lord has assigned to them and deserve paradise. We must educate children and young people in honesty, in a sense of duty and discipline, in the practice of the cardinal virtues as a coherent consequence of the theological virtues; in the responsibility of knowing that good and evil exist, and that our freedom consists in moving in the sphere of what is Good

CDC waited months before informing public of increase in post-vax blood clotting deaths

By World Tribune

The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) confirmed increasing incidents in 2021 of individuals dying from blood clotting after receiving a Covid vaccine with known links to increase blood clotting risk, but did not alert the public for months, newly obtained emails show.

In April of 2021, officials recommended a nationwide pause on use of the Johnson & Johnson vaccine, produced by its subsidiary Janssen, after six women experienced thrombosis with thrombocytopenia syndrome (TTS), a condition involving low platelet levels and blood clots. Three of these six women died.

Nevertheless, officials reported the vaccine safe and allowed resumed administration of the vaccine.

However, the numbers continued to increase, garnering recognition even among CDC officials, who appear to have disregarded mounting reports of health events in the Vaccine Adverse Event Reporting System (VAERS).

Dr. Tom Shimabukuro, MD, the CDC's Deputy Director of the Immunization Safety Office, informed colleagues in mid-October of 2021 that five such deaths had occurred. These deaths had transpired by August of that year.

On Dec. 2, 2021, Shimabakuro informed colleagues there and at the Food and Drug Administration (FDA) , "We have confirmed a 9th TTS death following Janssen vaccination," according to emails obtained by The Epoch Times through a Freedom of Information Act request.

On Dec. 14, the FDA urged healthcare workers against administering the vaccine to people with certain conditions due to the TTS risk.

On Dec. 18, Dr. Isaac See, MD, a CDC official with the Vaccine Safety Team, informed the public of the nine deaths, during a meeting.

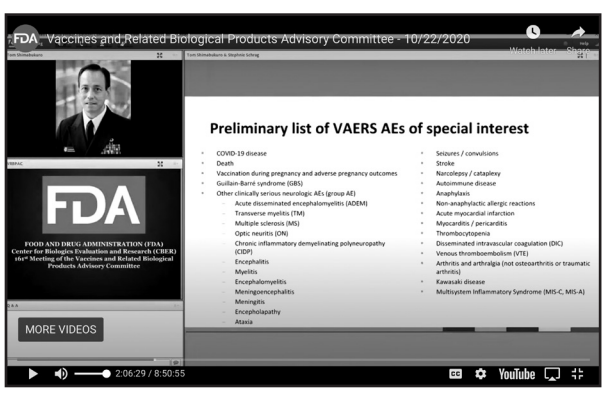
Release of these emails adds to mounting evidence, centering around Dr. Shimabukuro, that CDC and FDA officials knowingly concealed from the public information concerning health risks associated with the Covid vaccines.

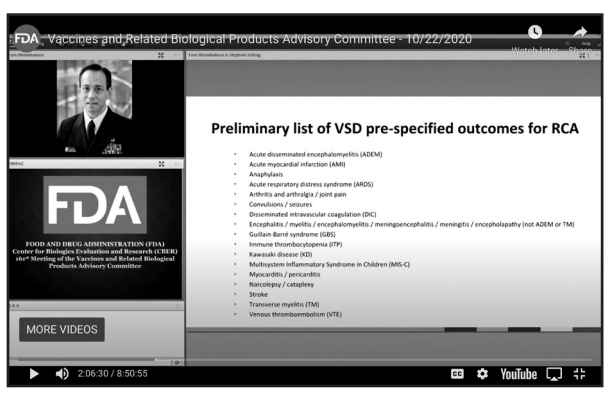
On Oct. 22, 2020, more than a year before these newly disclosed emails were composed and well ahead of the vaccine rollout, Drs. Shimabukuro and the FDA's Steven Anderson, MD, in separate presentations at the FDA's 161st meeting of the Vaccines and Related Biological Products Advisory Committee recognized numerous possible adverse reactions, while at the very same time advancing their slides too quickly for the lists to be seen.

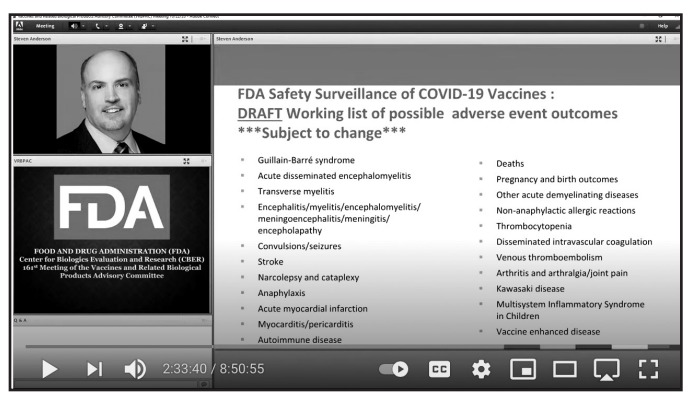
Digital recording, however, captured these images.

Each lists numerous adverse reactions, including multiple forms of thrombosis and other potentially fatal side effects, including myocarditis and stroke, which have flooded the VAERS and national reporting systems in other countries.

Dr. Tom Shimabukuro, MD, Deputy Director of the Immunization Safety Office, CDC:







CDC admits it never monitored VAERS for Covid vax safety signals

By World Tribune

The CDC has confirmed that it has never monitored the vaccine adverse events reporting system VAERS for signals regarding the safety of the Covid shots.

The CDC's admission came in response to a Freedom of Information Act (FOIA) request submitted by Children's Health Defense.

Meanwhile, VAERS data released on Friday show 1,307,928 reports of adverse events from all age groups following Covid vaccination, including 29,031 deaths and 240,022 serious injuries. The data covers the time period between Dec. 14, 2020, and June 17, 2022.

The data show an increased of 6,572 adverse events over the previous week, including 172 deaths and 1,610 serious injuries.

Of the 29,031 reported deaths, 18,814 cases are attributed to the Pfizer vaccine, 7,627 cases to Moderna, and 2,525 cases to Johnson & Johnson.

"The CDC is supposed to mine VAERS data for safety signals by calculating what are known as proportional reporting ratios (PRRs), Children's Health Defense said. "This is a method of comparing the proportion of different types of adverse events reported for a new vaccine to the proportion of those events reported for an older, established vaccine."

If the new vaccine shows a significantly higher reporting rate of a particular adverse event relative to the old one, it counts as a safety signal that should then trigger a more thorough investigation.

According to a briefing document obtained by Children's Health Defense, the CDC "will perform PRR data mining on a weekly basis or as needed."

In its response to the FOIA request, the CDC wrote that "no PRRs were conducted by CDC" and data mining is "outside of the agency's purview." The agency suggested Children's Health Defense should contact the FDA, which was supposed to perform a different type of data mining, according to the briefing document.

AAPS News: Depopulation

Even if the majority of our population still believes in it, Paul Ehrlich's "population bomb" has not only fizzled but is imploding. If something does not change, we will have a situation unprecedented in world history, worse than even the Black Plague, Elon Musk pointed out in 2018. A video based on Our World in Data concerning number of children per woman from 1950 until 2020 shows fertility plummeting everywhere. Almost all the places that exceed replacement level are in Africa (https://twitter.com/TexasLindsay/status/1527722818053586950).

"Reproductive rights" championed by the AMA—and proposed as a fundamental human right by progressive politicians—mean almost exclusively the right not to reproduce. Sexual stimuli are pervasive, promoted even in kindergarten by vendors of "comprehensive sex education"—along with contraception, unlimited abortion, and forms of gratification that cannot produce a child (but can transmit infections that impair fertility).

Many young people do not want to have children, often because they have no hope for the future. Climate change, or pollution, or nuclear war will kill us all, they are told. Economic prospects are dismal. The "smart" future is life in the pod—no self-owned cars, no wide open spaces, every act or thought tracked.

And if there is no future, no frontier, and no opportunity to build or create something new, why work more than necessary to subsist and be entertained? And if there are no children? "Why do men work, says the poet Charles Peguy, if not for their children? The father throws himself away in hope," writes Anthony Esolen (https://tinyurl.com/bdh2hwsp).

What if we do away with fatherhood, or "patriarchy," as radical feminists demand? "Think of the hopelessness of the secular world, which has set its face in stubborn self-destruction against the figure of the father," writes Esolen. "It is not just a gray life without fathers. It is a severely constricted life, bound to the present, not a culture but a mirthless floating along with the suggestions of mass phenomena."

The global elite desires immortality, not through children, but rather through transhumanism (AAPS News, April 2021). World Economic Forum advisor Yuval Noah Harari claims that humans can gain "divine powers" (https://tinyurl.com/jvk85spv). Would a human cyborg be like the Head in C.S. Lewis's 1945 novel, That Hideous Strength?

The Inverted Pyramid

An inverted population pyramid will collapse, as Musk pointed out. How will the shrinking number of workers support all the frail elderly? Medicare is already paying out more than it takes in, and digital dollars can't answer call buttons or turn into bread.

Was it "culling the herd" to send COVID-infected residents back to nursing homes? Age-related rationing in medical care is alive and well, writes AAPS past president Marilyn Singleton, M.D., J.D. (tinyurl.com/2pn9kv99).

U.S. life expectancy is at its lowest in 25 years, having fallen by 1.5 years in 2020 (https://tinyurl.com/2p9ywwn6), and continuing to fall in 2021. COVID is only part of the explanation and does not account for an alarming increase in death rates of working age people coinciding with COVID vaccine rollouts (AAPS News, March 2022). In a CNN interview, FDA chief Robert Califf, M.D., said that American lives are, on average, 5 years shorter than in other high-income countries, and that "misinformation" is the leading cause of death—regarding heart disease and other big killers as well as COVID. No one who is completely up to date on injections and gets the new antivirals should die of COVID, he claims (tinyurl.com/2s44eeck).

Abp. Viganò: 'Pride' movement is satanic, must be conquered by 'reparation,' charity

By Archbishop Carlo Maria Viganò

Dear Faithful, Laudetur Iesus Christus – Praised be Jesus Christ!

For those who are participating in this evening's procession of reparation, and especially for the participants who are less young, it seems almost incredible that in the course of a few decades Italy could have been transformed in such a radical way, canceling the legacy of Catholicism that made her great and prosperous among nations.

We are witnessing a process – apparently irreversible – of apostasy of the Faith; a process which is the opposite of what St. Leo the Great described in celebrating the solemnity of the Holy Apostles Peter and Paul, in which he praised the providential role of the Alma Urbe, the beloved City of Rome: having been a teacher of error, Rome became a disciple of the Truth, wrote the great Pontiff. Today we could say, with the dismay of children betrayed by their father, that the Rome of the Martyrs and Saints having been a teacher of Truth, has become a disciple of error. Because the present apostasy, which involves civil and religious authority in a rebellion against God the Creator and Redeemer, did not start from below, but from the top.

Those who govern public affairs as well as the Pastors of the Church show that they are obedient to the anti-gospel of the world, and while refusing to pay due respect to Christ the King and obedience to His holy Will, they bend their knees before the new idols of political correctness and burn incense before the simulacrum of humanity brutalized by vice and sin. Those who today lead the people in temporal and spiritual things have as their purpose not the common good of citizens and the salvation of the souls of the faithful, but their corruption, their damnation. And the masses, having abandoned the way of honesty, righteousness and holiness, abandon themselves to deception, corruption and infernal revolt against God.

It is not surprising to see the obscene manifestations of "Pride" along the streets of the cities: the public space that the aberrant have conquered in recent decades had been abandoned well before by Catholics, whose clergy considered professions in honor of the Blessed Sacrament, the Blessed Virgin, and Patron Saints as ostentations of "post-Tridentine triumphalism."

It is not surprising to see the legalization of divorce, abortion, euthanasia, sodomitic unions and all the worst that a deviant and insane humanity is capable: if this has happened, it is because Catholics were told that they could not impose their own vision of the world and of society, and that they would have to coexist, in the name of democracy and freedom, with the enemies of Christ. And it was a deception, because the tolerance that they demanded of the Christian majority of the country is no longer allowed, and everyone must submit to the dictatorship of aligned thought, gender ideology, and LGBTQ doctrine. Don't you remember? Marriage was not questioned, but we were asked to accept civil unions. And once the interest groups had been given legitimacy, the door was opened to same-sex marriage, adoptions for same-sex couples, surrogate motherhood, postnatal abortion, and euthanasia imposed in some nations even on young people and the poor.

Scelesta turba clamitat: Regnare Christum nolumus, we sing in the hymn Te Saeculorum Principem for the feast of Christ the King. The delirious rabble shouts: We do not want Christ to reign. That infernal cry, inspired by Satan, is perhaps the only honest thing they can say. And it is true: in the social Kingdom of Christ there is no place for vice; there can be no legitimacy for sin nor tolerance for the corruption of young people. Our adversaries know well that the Civitas Dei and the civitas diaboli are enemies, and that any coexistence is not only impossible but unthinkable and absurd, since Christian society is antithetical and irreconcilable with "secular" society.

You have gathered to give public witness to the Faith, with the intention of making reparation for the sacrileges and blasphemies of the scelesta turba against Jesus Christ and His Most Holy Mother. Because in the face of the cruel and obscene hatred of these rebellious souls we must follow the example of the Lord, outraged by His executioners at the same moment that He sacrificed Himself on the Cross for their salvation. It is in fact Christ himself, with His Incarnation, Passion and Death, who first made reparation for the infinite sins of men towards the eternal Father. For only a God could atone for disobedience to God, and only a Man could offer this reparation in the name of mankind. And we too, who are living members of the Mystical Body of Christ which is the Holy Church, can and must make reparation for the offenses and sins of our fellow human beings with the same spirit, the same obedience, and the same trusting abandonment to the Father.

And while we look with sorrow at the multitude of sins erected as a model to be imitated by a society that is against man precisely because it is against God, the duty of Charity requires us to pray for those who have allowed themselves to be seduced by the deception of the Serpent, so that they may convert and repent. The inclusive world they promised you; the supposed freedom to be and do what you want regardless of the Law of the Lord; the license and vice that is celebrated and the virtue that is mocked and discredited – these are all lies, just as the promise, "You will be like gods," that Satan made to our first parents in the earthly paradise was also a lie.

I address myself to those who are taking part in these manifestations of so-called "gay pride." No: you will not be like gods; you will be like beasts. You will not have happiness; you will have pain, illness, and death – eternal death. You will not have peace; you will have discord and quarrels and wars. You will not have prosperity; you will have poverty. You will not be free; you will be slaves. And this will happen indefectibly, because the Liar is a murderer from the beginning, and he wants your death, erasing in your eyes the image of God, stealing from you that blessed eternity that he first lost with his own rebellion. Because the first to sin by pride was Lucifer, with his Non serviam – I will not bend; I will not bow to God;I will not recognize Him as my Lord and Creator. How can you hope that he who hates the Author of life can love you who are His creatures? How can you believe that the one who has been condemned to eternal damnation could be capable of promising you that eternal bliss of which he was the first to be forever deprived?

This procession must not be an occasion for confrontation, but rather an opportunity to show the many people deceived by the Evil One that there exists a people who are animated by sentiments of Faith and Charity, a people which with generosity and with a supernatural gaze offers its prayers, fasts, and sacrifices to implore forgiveness for the sins of their brothers. Charity, founded on the immutable Truth of God, is a tremendous weapon against Satan and an infallible instrument to convert the world and bring many souls back to the Lord. Bring them back to the One who shed his blood even for them, out of love – an infinite, irrevocable love, a love that conquers the world, a love that moves mountains, a love that gives meaning to our life and does not frustrate our existence.

When we see the image of the Savior nailed to the Cross and think of the torments He suffered to ransom and redeem us,we cannot remain insensitive, just as the pagans, idolaters, and sinners of past centuries have not remained insensitive. Societies corrupt in intellect and will, given over to the worst vices, and ensnared by false religions have been conquered by that love – indeed: by that charity – which led the martyrs, even children, women and the elderly not to react against their executioners, so as not to fail in God's love. How many have been converted by seeing Christians die with dignity as they are persecuted for their faith! How many have been baptized after witnessing the example of Christians and the simple Truth of the Gospel!

And so let us carry out this reparation. Let us do it with a supernatural spirit, convinced that precisely in the humble following of Christ on the way to Calvary we will be able to lead many souls to Him who today are so far away. And the more we see the unleashing of the powers of evil, let us persevere all the more in the good and in the certainty of the victory of Christ, the true and only Light of the world, over the darkness of sin and death.

Let us ask the Holy Spirit with filial trust to infuse His holy Grace into sinners, to touch their hearts, enlighten their minds, and encourage their will. So that those who have hitherto been teachers of error and examples of sin may, through the help and mercy of God and through the intercession of His Most Holy Mother and our Mother, be disciples of truth and an example of virtue. And so may it be.

'Do Not Transition Your Kids': California Teen Tells Her Heartbreaking Story In Support Of DeSantis Plan

By Greg Wilson

Seventeen-year-old Chloe Cole, who de-transitioned after chemical and surgical treatments in a fruitless effort to become male, said Florida officials. The radical gender theory sweeping the nation can have dangerous and even deadly consequences on kids.

Chloe, who at age 13 took puberty blockers and two years later had a double mastectomy, which "irreversibly and painfully" damaged her body, said she now is unlikely to ever be a mother and faces a heightened risk of cancer. Her testimony came during a public hearing on whether Florida should reimburse people for what advocates call "gender-affirming care."

"No child should have to experience what I have," the California teen told the rapt hearing, which included state Medicaid and Board of Medicine officials.

"My consent was not informed."

every single-family house they can find, paying 20-50% above asking price and outbidding usual home buyers." (And before you ask, BlackRock is connected to Black Stone, but that is another story.)

BlackRock and one of the other GPPPs are also ". . . taking over centralized food production technologies and will have near-total control over the future food supply in America". [8] They also largely own the world's top ten food companies. And owner, Larry Fink, says it is time to force people's behavior to change. What behavior is that? Where we live, what we eat, if we procreate? Those are the general Agenda21/GPPP/Great Reset points. To "build back better" in Marxism means to destroy everything of moral value and individual freedom and leave a rotten, fallow, world behind. Marxism cannot build back anything; it is built on the Hegelian Dialectic which tears down step after step – with no reconstruction. So, according to the GPPP, building back better means taking full control of the global commons. The global commons used to mean "those parts of the planet that fall outside national jurisdictions and to which all nations have access". Now they mean "and all the other parts of the planet, too".

Will they succeed? In my opinion, no. They have rushed their plan in attempt to complete it – it being Agenda 21 and one-world government – by 2030, rather than their 2050 initial date. There are other factors that will undo them, including that no matter how big your computer, you cannot factor in every variable necessary to build that tyrannical rule. In fact, there are schisms amongst the players right now. And the biggie – we Americans who still have functioning brains and moral compasses are not ready to be serfs or be composted for fertilizer.

We will prevail, but because so many waited so long to wake up, it will be an ugly, dystopian world because the "building back better" only builds, at best, brownfields.

Being BlackRocked is a dream of the GPPP and a "nightmare of all nightmares" for sane, rational, moral people.

The Lion may be battered and bruised, but he will still Roar.

impact on the environment would be hugely negative. And, for anyone who cares about people in developing countries, they need to understand that the transition to wind and solar power fosters massive human rights abuses across the world when one considers how these energy sources are made.

Yet, the energy transition is all the rage in Washington DC these days. For example, Canada's Minister of Natural Resources Jonathan Wilkinson was in DC in May to meet with U.S. Secretary of Energy Jennifer Granholm, members of the Senate Committee on Energy and Natural Resources, White House officials, and business leaders to advance "shared opportunities to accelerate climate action and the transition to net-zero emissions."

Granholm said,

"…we will work to accelerate the clean energy transition in both our countries, spurring job growth and ushering in a 100% clean energy future."

In announcing the results from the Department of the Interior's wind energy auction in the Carolina Long Bay area, Secretary Deb Haaland took a similar tack to Granholm and said on May 11th:

"Today's lease sale is further proof that there is strong industry interest and that America's clean energy transition is here."

Where, Ms. Haaland? Not in America, that's for sure. And not anywhere else on Earth, either. After 5 trillion dollars has been spent by the world's governments, collectively, oil still fuels nearly 97% of all transportation. Burning wood supplies more energy than all solar, with electric vehicles yet to reach one percent of cars on the road. And fossil fuel use is already back to pre-COVID-19 lockdown levels.

Writing in The Epoch Times, former Reagan Whitehouse science advisor Mark Mills, now Senior Fellow at the Manhattan Institute, explained where our country and the world are really going for their energy. Contrary to the naïve Granholm and Haaland proclamations, it is certainly not to the sham of renewable energy. Mills tells us that the headlines are all true — the left does indeed want more wind, solar and electric cars, and even higher electricity prices to stifle progress. In one sense, these headlines are great because, as will become clear in November, every morning… more and more Americans wake as FORMER Democratic voters.

In real science, one would use the observations that the Earth is not warming, extreme weather events are not becoming more frequent or severe, sea-level rise, where it is occurring at all, is not unusual, and so on to reject the hypothesis that we are causing dangerous climate change. But not with the left's effort to destroy capitalism. We see that no matter the obstacles or the advice of energy experts, all developed nations are doubling down on plans to spend yet more trillions of dollars on the hopelessly impractical and, indeed, impossible energy transition being promoted by Granholm, Haaland, and everyone else in the Biden administration. Mills reveals a crucial fact that apparently none of them know:

"Building the hardware for transition aspirations will require an unprecedented increase in global mining at scales almost certainly unachievable in the time frames proposed. And aside from the challenges in replacing existing uses for fossil fuels, transitionists fail to account for huge growth in energy demands that will yet come from the kinds of emerging innovations that everyone wants."

Building solar and wind systems requires an increase in the use of common materials such as concrete, steel, and glass, and of course, rare earth minerals critical in all magnetic systems. Even the World Bank concluded that clean energy is more material intensive than present sources of energy. The world does not have enough mines to provide such materials. An important fact is that the leftist promoters of the energy transition are either not smart enough to realize or do not care about it, as the destruction of the present world system is apparently their real goal. On top of this is the escalating cost of all things relating to wind and solar power.

And, of course, all roads for the energy transition lead directly to China. The U.S. has ample supplies of all necessary minerals but not the appropriate laws allowing their mining or refining. On top of that, a Finish Geological Survey report calculated the entire world does not contain all the minerals needed to transition the world to the new unobtainable forms of energy.

Ultimately, as costs for everything skyrocket, shortages become common, and backouts like that which occurred in Texas in February 2021 that killed 700 people become widespread, sanity will eventually reappear. Will it take a few years or decades? Who knows, but we must work to make it as short as possible.

Will advances in modern technology solve the problems already presented? Mills says no:

"Entrepreneurs are far better at inventing new ways to use energy than to produce it. History proves this to be accurate."

Before the invention of the automobile, the airplane, pharmaceuticals and computers, relatively little energy was needed. Now billions more people want these things. While the US has 80 cars per hundred people, much of the rest of the world has but five. Not surprisingly, they want to catch up as quickly as possible. Already, the computer cloud uses twice the energy Japan uses, while the semiconductor industry plans a $300 billion expansion.

These are the known trends. While we can't forecast the future, we can predict that politicians like Haaland and Granholm will go down in history as dangerously misinformed opportunists. Regardless of the platitudes of the Biden team, few Americans will voluntarily sacrifice the exceptional lives we have inherited from our forefathers. And that means inexpensive and abundant energy, the key to the innovations that make our lives exceptional.

companies, including Merck and AstraZeneca.

Global elitists are more concerned about absolute numbers, not age distribution, and the total is about seven times more than our fragile planet can sustain, they say. Either we cut carbon emissions (achievable only by measures that will cut population) to prevent climate change, or climate change will cause mass death.

Dennis Meadows of the Club of Rome says he hopes we can achieve the needed depopulation (down to about 1 billion) by "civil (nonviolent) means"—he hopes by slow and "relatively equal" means. We can have 8 or 9 billion only with a strong dictatorship and much reduced consumption (tinyurl.com/pwtran8j).

Anti-COVID and anti-"climate change" policies are surely making the middle class more equal to government-dependent welfare recipients and less able to resist. A huge wealth transfer from small business to multinational corporations has occurred. The Woke professional managerial class in government agencies, academia, media, and corporations is doing fine—for now.

Will the "people rise up"? Yellow Vests were in the streets for 3 years, and Macron got re-elected. Canadian truckers and any who supported them are being financially ruined by Trudeau.

Successful revolts, such as the American Revolution, don't come from the proles, but from elites with means, who fight on principle or because their own interests are threatened. The greatest threat to the global Left is men like Donald Trump or Elon Musk, who can afford the fight and are too rich to be bought, at least not with money. Where are our right-minded elites?

We may soon see massive depopulation from sickness, sudden death, infertility, and starvation. The result is the intention.

70 Years of Brainwashing. We already live in an advanced cultural Marxist society even though half of the country is still lulled in the false sense that we are still a Constitutional Republic. The globalists have transformed young generations into pliable communist drones. People whisper to their friends that they do not like what is going on, but they are too afraid to speak out for fear of losing their jobs or licenses, or of public shaming and ridicule. Global depopulation: Taiwan, Hungary, Germany show record post-vaccine declines in new births

By WorldTribune Staff

Information released by the governments of Germany, Hungary, and Taiwan show unprecedented decreases in birth rates since rollout of the Covid-19 vaccines.

The state of North Dakota, the United Kingdom, and Switzerland saw similar declines.

Germany saw a 13% drop in the first quarter of 2022 compared with Q1 of 2021. Hungary's data reports a 15% decline during the same period. In Taiwan, birthrates declined by an astounding 23% in May of 2022, compared with May of 2021.

These declines are statistically extraordinary, explains Igor Chudov, a Substack blogger and owner of a mathematics website. Chudov characterized the 13% drop as a "nine-sigma event."

For perspective, an 8-sigma event might occur once in 803 trillion days. A 9-sigma event, by comparison, "is so unlikely to occur by chance, that it would naturally happen as rarely as an asteroid striking the Earth," he writes.

Taiwan's 23% decline, however, is an astonishing "26-sigma event."

It "can be described as 'unimaginable' in terms of the likelihood of happening due to random chance," Chudov, notes, adding it is as statistically unlikely apart from human causation as an event that happens once in "several lifetimes of the universe."

While Hungary's decline lies somewhere in between these improbabilities, it also offers strong evidence of the cause.

In all of these countries, the decline in birthrate lagged the uptake of vaccination by a majority of childbearing-age adults by precisely nine months.

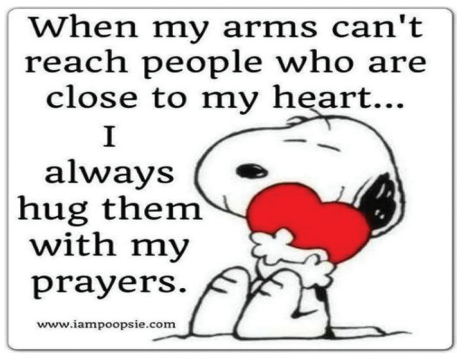
In Hungary, however, the data from different counties offers something much stronger than mere correlation. Different counties in Hungary had different levels of vaccine participation.

The five counties in Hungary with the highest vaccination rates also had the greatest decline in new births — a -17.4% decline in the most vaccinated versus -4.58% in the least vaccinated counties, adjusted for population. This represents a 12.8% difference across an ethnically homogenous people group.

German officials were quick to write off their own decline as coincidental and claimed, contrary to data out of Belgium, that in the spring of 2021, vaccinations "were offered almost exclusively to older people." However, comparable Belgian data shows 18 to 49-year-olds began receiving Covid-19 vaccines in the spring of 2021, with the vast majority vaccinated by the end of summer. That is exactly the starting window for a decline in May, if the vaccines were the cause.

Taiwan's data was even more telling.

Although Taiwanese health officials blame Covid-19 itself as the cause, in truth, Covid-19 infection was virtually zero in Taiwan throughout 2021, by which time the countries nearly universal vaccination was already at 80%. The pandemic did not begin in Taiwan until late June of 2022, well after the decline in births.



These countries are not alone.

North Dakota saw 10% to 13% declines between the months of February and April, 2022 compared with the same months in 2021. The United Kingdom saw a 10% decline. Switzerland saw a similar decline.

Chudov observes that it is unknown whether the drop in birth rates will be temporary or lasting.

He asks, "If this is happening in Q1 in Germany after a MINORITY of 18-49 yo were vaccinated in Q2 2021, what will happen in subsequent quarters? Will the birth rate decline even further?"

Was vaccinating children a mistake? 'Yes', admits Denmark's Health Authority

By WorldTribune Staff

The director-general of Denmark's Health Authority said that in retrospect injecting children with the Covid vaccine was a mistake.

Søren Brostrøm said while hosting "Go Evening Live" on TV 2: "In hindsight, we did not get much out of vaccinating the children. I want to look all parents of children who have vaccinated their child in the eye and say, 'You did the right thing, and thank you for listening,' "

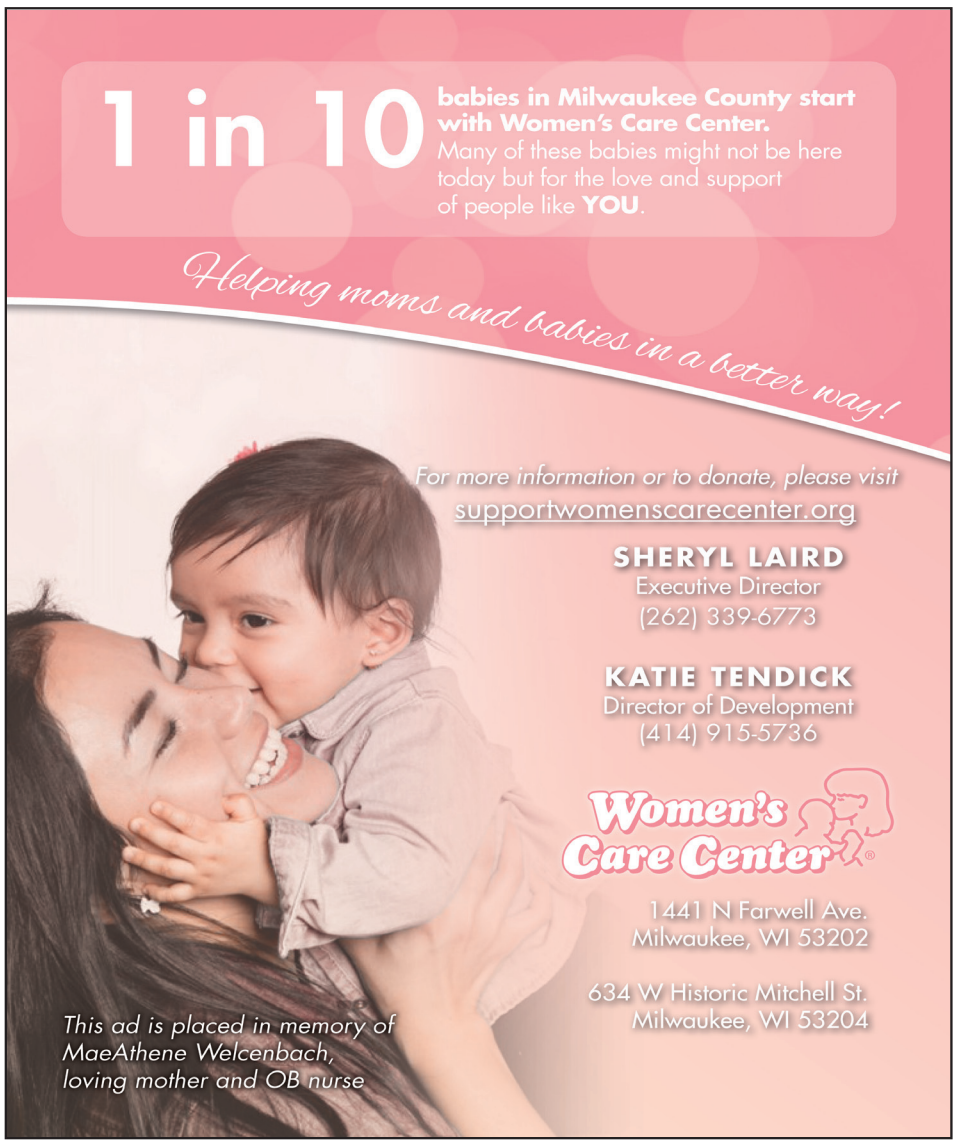
"But at the same time… and this is the important thing to maintain confidence… I will admit and say that we have become wiser and we would not do the same today. And we will not do that in the future either," he added.

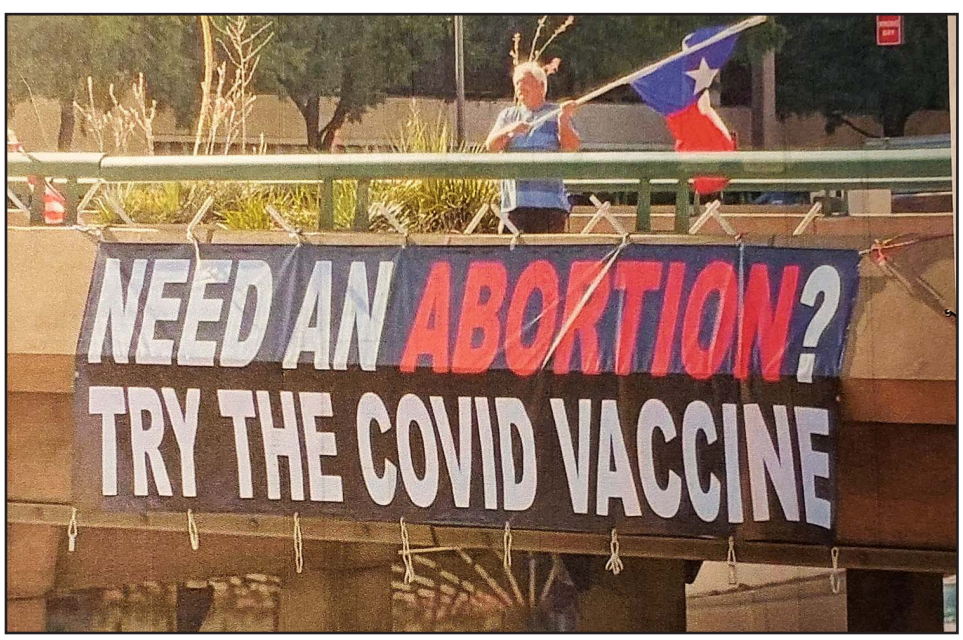
Christine Stabell Benn, clinical professor at the University of Southern Denmark, has long been critical of the vaccination of children. She told TV 2 that she had no doubt that the recommendation to give the Covid vaccine to the age group 12-15 was unnecessary.

"We had some vaccines with a very unknown side effect profile, and at the same time we had some children who had nothing to gain by being vaccinated," Stabell Benn told TV 2.

As the National Board of Health itself has expressed that there were many uncertainties about whether it was the right decision, Stabell Benn said she believes that the board should have adjusted the strength of their campaign and urges the board to reconsider whether there was really a reason to "put so much pressure on the parents" to get the children vaccinated:

"In addition, children were made responsible for the health of their parents and grandparents. That, I think, is unreasonable," Stabell Benn said. "I think there are a lot of parents left out there who say, 'What was this all about?' There are many parents who have really struggled to get their children dragged down to the vaccination center, but to what use?"





VOICE OF JERUSALEM

Biden's Anti-Israel Gambit in Jerusalem Undermines American Sovereignty

By Caroline Glick

The Palestinian Authority is waging lawfare against the United States. And rather than defend America, the Biden administration has joined the Palestinian lawfare campaign against it. That is how the Biden administration's recent decision to initiate steps to form a separate diplomatic mission to the Palestinians in Israel's capital ought to be understood.

Earlier this month, The Washington Free Beacon revealed that the administration has decided to separate the Palestinian Affairs Unit from its embassy to Israel in Jerusalem. The head of the "unit" will be an ambassador in all but name—directly appointed by the secretary of state and subordinate to him in the chain of command. Today, in accordance with the Jerusalem Embassy Act of 1995, the head of the Palestinian section of the U.S. embassy in Jerusalem is subordinate to the U.S. ambassador to Israel.

The declared goal of the administration is to fulfill President Joe Biden's campaign pledge to open a consulate for the Palestinians in Israel's capital city. The move has been stymied to date by strong congressional disapproval and by the fact that such a move is unlawful—under both U.S. and international law—unless Israel approves it. But Israel vigorously opposes Biden's position, which it views as hostile to Israeli sovereignty in Jerusalem.

Israel, obviously, is correct. Biden's efforts to open a consulate to the Palestinians, whose leadership rejects Israel's very right to exist in Israel's capital, is most certainly hostile to Israel. The international law requirement is that a foreign government wishing to open a diplomatic legation in one nation's capital to a different nation first must receive the permission of the sovereign. That is commonsensical. And Biden's efforts to do just that in Jerusalem—but without Israel's permission—is an assault on Israeli sovereignty.

But to understand why Biden's efforts are not simply anti-Israel but also anti-American, and involve complicity in Palestinian lawfare against the United States itself, requires a longer explanation.

Lawfare has been broadly defined as the abuse of international institutions and the language of law (legalese), rather than actual laws, to pursue strategic aims. The Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO) and its allies have long used lawfare as an adjunct to terrorism in their war to annihilate the Jewish state.

Initially, the PLO focused almost exclusively on terrorism. Its 1964 charter made this explicit, defining "armed struggle" (i.e., terrorism) as "the only way to liberate Palestine."

"This is the overall strategy, not merely a tactical phase," Article 9 of the charter declared.

After Israel defeated the combined armies of Egypt, Jordan and Syria in 1967, and again defeated the Syrians and Egyptians in 1973, the PLO began to adapt its strategy. In 1974, it produced what it referred to as the "Phased Plan" to destroy the Jewish state. The plan involved expanding the PLO's operations from terrorism only to "all means, and first and foremost armed struggle, to liberate Palestinian territory and to establish the independent combatant national authority for the people over every part of Palestinian territory that is liberated."

The next year, with Soviet-bloc support, the UN General Assembly passed Resolution 3379, which labeled Zionism—the Jewish national liberation movement—as a form of racism. And the Palestinian lawfare campaign was off to a running start.

During the 1990s, in the framework of the peace process between Israel and the PLO, the two sides agreed that territories Israel transferred to PLO control would be governed by an autonomous Palestinian governing authority it dubbed the Palestinian Authority (PA). The agreements that both sides signed stipulated that the PA would not be a state, and would not operate against Israel in international organizations or apply for membership in international organizations as a state.

In a New York Times op-ed in 2011, PLO chief and PA chairman Mahmoud Abbas announced the PA was ignoring its obligations to Israel in material breach of the agreements he himself signed. Abbas launched a campaign to have "Palestine" accepted as a member-state in international institutions—first and foremost, the United Nations—and to use that membership as a means to expand its lawfare against Israel. As he put it, "Palestine's admission to the United Nations would pave the way for the internationalization of the conflict as a legal matter, not only a political one. It would also pave the way for us to pursue claims against Israel at the United Nations, human rights treaty bodies and the International Court of Justice."

Since then, Abbas and the PA have inexorably escalated their lawfare to delegitimize Israel's very existence in international forums and to demonize the Jewish state and Israel's Jewish supporters worldwide.

In 2018, Abbas and his PLO/PA turned their lawfare campaign against a new Target: the United States. In May 2018, in accordance with U.S. and international law, then-President Donald Trump opened the U.S. embassy in Israel's capital, Jerusalem. Four months later, the Palestinian Authority, acting as the nonexistent "State of Palestine," sued the U.S. in the International Court of Justice (ICJ) in The Hague. The Palestinian lawsuit asks the ICJ to compel the U.S. to remove its embassy from Israel's capital.

The case is still open before the court. An administration committed to maintaining U.S. sovereignty and the rule of law—not to mention standing by its greatest Middle East ally—would, at a minimum, demand that the PLO/PA withdraw its lawsuit as a precondition for holding any discussions about U.S. diplomatic operations in Jerusalem. A more robust U.S. policy would include suspending all U.S. financial support and diplomatic contacts with the PLO/PA so long as the Palestinians maintain their lawfare campaign against the U.S. in The Hague.

The Biden administration's decision to separate the Palestinian Affairs Unit away from the U.S. embassy, as a first step toward opening a distinct consulate for the Palestinians in Jerusalem, while the PLO/PA's lawsuit against the United States is still pending before the ICJ, does the opposite. It boosts the Palestinians' specious claims against America and encourages the PLO/PA and all other would-be U.S. antagonists to turn to transnational institutions to whittle away the authority of U.S. and international law, and to undermine American sovereignty.

reports on COVID deaths, suppressed reports of daily suicides in children, and misled Trump on the effects of lockdowns and of the fraud vaccine, which they knew had huge problems of safety and effectiveness. It was all about forcing every man, woman, and child on the globe to take the vaccine. Almost all the media worked in unison with the insiders, the politicians, and the deep-state bureaucracy. They hated Trump so much and did not care about the U.S. There is no negotiating with these people. Trump should have never ever played nice. They savaged him for it; he did not know they repay decency in D.C. with more hate and brutality. They win at all costs, and they will destroy the nation to get their way—look around you.

Nothing on COVID by CDC, NIH, Health Canada, Public Health Agency of Canada, the Scientific Advisory Group for Emergencies (SAGE)—nothing was based on data or science. So-called experts were corrupted, inept, illogical, irrational, sloppy, and reckless. We need a proper public legal inquiry, and if we find that any did wrong and that their decisions cost lives, they must be held accountable. I want an acute focus on vaccines in children. I think people know that children will die, but they do not care. Their careers, grants, and fame are more important.

A 1989 Inflection Point? According to Robert F. Kennedy, Jr., in an interview with Mike Tyson (https://tinyurl.com/sr7zfwuy), if you were born before 1989, your chance of having a chronic disease is 12%. If you were born after 1989, it's 54%. In 1989, the CDC packed multiple doses of several more vaccines into the childhood schedule. Every one of the injuries that have become an epidemic is listed as a side effect on the manufacturer's inserts of the 72 vaccine doses that are now mandated for our children.

Autoimmune Hepatitis. Yet another scientific article points to the danger of current COVID vaccines given to children, and is another reason I believe mandates for these vaccines for children should be criminal. Just a few weeks after the rollout of this vaccine for children, WHO issued a global alert about higher than usual rates of hepatitis in previously healthy children, after ruling out the common viral causes. Many cases were so severe the patients required a liver transplant or died. The Journal of Hepatology (tinyurl.com/2p98twab) reported a case showing that "COVID-19 vaccination can elicit a distinct T cell-dominant immune-mediated hepatitis." The American Academy of Pediatrics, CDC, FDA, et al. are going to create ever-increasing mistrust (justifiably), the longer they ignore a rising mountain of evidence.

Rep. Ramthun: Reintroducing the Resolution to Reclaim

MADISON- State Representative Timothy Ramthun (R-Campbellsport) issued the following statement in response to the July 8th Wisconsin Supreme Court ruling on Richard Teigen v. Wisconsin Elections Commission:

"My continued and unwavering efforts to seek closure of, by, and for the people regarding the 2020 election, was once again vindicated now that the Supreme Court has confirmed the use of ballot drop boxes in Wisconsin were illegal in 2020."

"The Legislative Audit Bureau investigation identified that 28.7 percent of municipal clerks across all 72 counties used these illegal drop boxes in 2020.

The ballots placed in those illegal drop boxes are null and void. Since there are no clear chain of custody records to allow for the separation of legal and illegal ballots statewide, the true determination of who won the November 2020 presidential election is impossible."

"Therefore, I am introducing LRB-6371, an updated and revised resolution to reclaim Wisconsin's ten electoral ballots and I am requesting an extraordinary session be held for a vote."

"I call upon my colleagues to support this historic and necessary action, and acknowledge it is our responsibility to use the plenary authority under Article II Section 1 Clause 2 of the US Constitution to decertify Wisconsin's 10 electoral ballots. It is the only course of action that can restore public confidence in elections and rectify the wrongs that have occurred on our watch."

MALADMINISTRATION AND ITS REMEDIES

by

K. C. WHEARE

Fellow of All Souls College, Oxford

Maladministration may be defined as administrative action (or inaction) based on or influenced by improper considerations or conduct. In this book, published contemporaneously with the 25th series of lectures under the auspices of the Hamlyn Trust, Sir Kenneth Wheare discusses the existing remedies for maladministration in Britain, and assesses their effectiveness in comparison with those available in other countries, particularly in Europe.

The book begins with a comprehensive survey of maladministration as it may occur in the actions of the officials of both central and local government With the tendency towards giant departments in central government, and with the introduction in 1974 of enlarged local government units, the author sees a real danger, not only that public administration may be still further removed from those it is intended to serve, but also that more administration is likely to mean correspondingly more maladministration. The discussion opens up the vast question of how a civil service should be recruited and organised in the first place.

The author goes on to consider, in separate chapters, the institutions intended at present to remedy maladministration. He discusses the work of the Courts of Law, including Tribunals, and compares them with their counterparts in France and elsewhere. He takes a fresh look at the doctrine of Ministerial Responsibility and considers the effectiveness of Parliamentary Select Committees and Public and Ministerial Inquiries, making particular reference to the 1954 Crichel Down affair and to the Vehicle and General Insurance Inquiry of 1972. Sir Kenneth provides an up-to-date assessment of the functions and powers of the Ombudsman, appointed in 1967, and compares them with those of Ombudsmen elsewhere, particularly in Scandinavia and New Zealand. The final chapter is an appraisal of the whole system of administrative remedies in Britain, and the author makes it clear that the comparison with the rest of Europe is not always a favourable one.

The book will be of particular interest, not only to students and teachers of constitutional, administrative, and local government law, but also to practising lawyers, and those working in central and local government.

783.03 Issues of fact; election cases, trial of.

(1) Issues of fact in mandamus proceedings instituted in the supreme court shall be tried in the circuit court of the county within which the cause of action arose or in such other county as the supreme court, for cause shown, may order, and the circuit courts may try the issues of fact and may summon a jury for that purpose and prescribe the manner of summoning the jury.

(2) In mandamus against a board of canvassers in the supreme court to compel the execution and delivery of a certificate of election to any person claiming to have been elected state senator or member of the assembly, or United States senator or representative in congress, or presidential elector, the court may if deemed necessary inquire into the facts of such election, irrespective of the election returns, and determine who received the greater number of legal votes cast, and the certificate issued in pursuance of such determination shall be the only lawful certificate of election to such office, and any other certificate of election to the same office shall be null and void. Such issue of fact may be tried as hereinbefore provided or according to such rules as the court may prescribe.
