Kyle Rittenhouse during closing arguments on Monday.

In closing arguments, Rittenhouse prosecutor rewrites Second Amendment

By WorldTribune Staff, November 15, 2021

Yes, he actually said this:

During closing arguments in the Kyle Rittenhouse case on Monday, Assistant District Attorney Thomas Binger said: "You lose the right to self-defense when you're the one who brought the gun."

Before closing arguments began, Judge Bruce Schroeder dismissed one count of illegal possession of a dangerous weapon by a person under 18. The misdemeanor, punishable by up to nine months in jail, was considered one of the stronger counts against Rittenhouse.

NBA player said Christian faith guided him to reject COVID jab, stand for national anthem

Jonathan Isaac appeared onstage at the National Conservatism Conference and explained why he rejects Black Lives Matter and COVID vaccines.

Jonathan Isaac of the NBA's Orlando Magic (LifeSiteNews) NBA player Jonathan Isaac has stood up at times when many of his teammates have not – literally for the national anthem and figuratively against coerced COVID vaccination.

His Christian faith, he said November 2 at the National Conservatism Conference, is what guides his decision-making.

"Christ is the answer for the problems that we see in the world and until we can humble ourselves and reckon with that, we won't see real change," Isaac said, first explaining why he did not join his teammates last year in supporting Black Lives Matter and kneeling during the national anthem.

The conversation with podcaster Dave Rubin, an open homosexual, then turned to Isaac's past statements on why

Why America Needs Donald Trump

By Gary L. Wickert

On August 8, 2016, Donald Trump spoke to the Detroit Economic Club, lamenting that during the Obama Administration, America had lost 740,000 car manufacturing jobs due to the outsourcing of factories overseas and our trade deficit with our Trans-Pacific Partnership (TPP) partners. Ford was planning to spend $1.6 billion to build a new auto manufacturing plant in San Luis Potosi, Mexico. Trump announced that if he was elected that November, he would put a 35% tariff on those cars when Ford tried to bring them back into the country and nobody would buy them. The following January—after Donald Trump was elected president and signed an executive order killing the TPP—Ford scrapped its

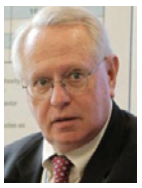
States Check into USA Under Hotel California Rules (II of V)



By William Kovacs

Part II of the series "Can the U.S Unite? If not, How Does It Divide?" makes the analogy that States joining the United States check in under the rules of the Hotel California: They can check out anytime they like, but they can never leave. No matter how bad it gets! No matter how much they are diminished! The principles of the Declaration of Independence be damned!

Countries, states, villages, and empires have been broken apart by internal conflict since humans organized. While there is no set rule on the time it takes to tear apart a nation's governing structures,

A Thanksgiving Message from Ecclesiastes

Byy Alti Nunio

During our current period of great wealth and freedom, we should be extremely thankful for all we have. King Solomon, who was fortuitous to rule Israel over 2000 years ago during a period of extreme affluence and prosperity, was an individual who had much time to ponder the human spirit. He shared many of these thoughts in the Old Testament writings in Ecclesiastes. I would like to share some biblical Steve's Say . . .

The Book of Revelation: Victory and Hope, Not Fear

By Steve Welcenbach

Most people on Planet Earth know that something is seriously wrong.

Governments all around the world from Canada, the UK, Australia to many European countries now pursue full Gestapo policies against the "unvaxxed" and anyone proclaiming their right as a free person made in the image of God. Vaccine passports, the modern day version of "your papers" ala Nazi Germany, normalize tyranny from New York City to most European countries, and provide the sole pathway to the crumbs of freedom the ruling class elites allow to the masses.

Yet despite all of the renewed efforts at lockdowns, quarantining (imprisoning) the "uncooperative" (unvaxxed) and administering the next "booster" jab, the masses want no part of it. Millions demonstrated in the streets of Melbourne, ignoring the full lockdown orders, way beyond the capability of any government entity to control or stop. The same happened in Austria at the announcement of the Third Reich reinstatement policies. Every weekend for the last several months French streets filled with freedom-loving people determined to enforce their God-given rights.

Of course, those still enchanted by mainstream media lies and cover ups know nothing of these events transpiring all across the planet. These enthralled individuals hold fast to the lie that the jab, a.k.a. clot shot they took and keep taking provides the pathway to health, safety and "freedom." Vehement and condescending diatribes of idiocy spew forth when they find out you're one of the "unvaxxed," illustrating their blissful ignorance to the unprecedented and rapidly accumulating deaths, debilitating injuries and myriad of other negative effects compiled via the CDC's VAERs reporting network, which documents only 1-10% of all actual adverse events according to a Harvard study.

The fact that the media dishonestly refers to this patented bioweapon as a vaccine required the CDC to redefine the term. This collection of crud containing mercury compounds, graphine oxide, nanotechnology, aborted baby cell lines besides the mRNA will modify the human genome per the maker's own admittance, unlike anything administered before. The trans-humanists involved in its creation boast about the capabilities the included nanotechnology will allow for direct interface with artificial intelligence (AI) and administered control of individuals.

In fact, some aver that this AI interface allows full tracking of all actions of every jabbed individual. Thus to buy or sell anything, or travel anywhere in the future will require this interface. Some say this constitutes the "Mark of the Beast" as referred to in the Book of Revelation 13:16-17. Looking at the patents associated with the research and production of this death shot along with the name Corona and the numbers assigned to legislation directly related to its implementation, you see alot of 666s appearing (Revelation 13:18). Weird, but intentional I think.

Is this shot the mechanism for installing the "Mark of the Beast" upon the world population? I don't know, but it sure seems possible. It may very well be. And for that reason alone I would NEVER, EVER under ANY CIRCUMSTANCES take the jab. I will defend my bodily sovereignty with any and all necessary action.

However, even excluding the "Mark of the Beast" scenario, no logical reason exists for taking this thing. The irrefutable fact that this elixir does not prevent future "covid" infections and actually enhances your chances of future illness demonstrates its destructive power on the natural human immune system. The illness referred to as "covid," whatever it is, presents essentially zero danger to children, little danger to young adults and very limited danger to the older population save those with other physical ailments or conditions. In all cases, a plethora of effective, inexpensive treatments can be administered from Budesonide, Hydroxychloroquine, Ivermectin and several others. Most people that died from "covid" in the past few months died from the "Fauci Protocol," the administering of Remdesivir followed by intubation once organ shut down starts followed by death. See the September Reality News edition for a tragic specific case.

As for me, I'll stick to my regimen of Vitamin D3, Zinc and Vitamin C as needed in conjunction with a diverse healthy diet including meat, fish, fruits, vegetables and dairy products. And a good nights sleep. But most importantly faith in God and His Son, our Lord Jesus Christ whom He sent to save the world.

Last night at my neighborhood men's Bible study we embarked upon the Book of Revelation, the last book in the Bible, after just finishing the Old Testament Book of Daniel. Anyone with some Biblical knowledge knows these two books go hand in hand. From our initial study we learned that Revelation conveys the complete story of Christ's victory over Death and the evil one Satan, from the beginning of the world, through his life, death and resurrection, and what is to come forth yet on Earth and how it will be transformed into Christ's never-ending kingdom.

Yes, there will be all kinds of trials and a tribulation never seen before. Yet for the true believers and followers of Christ this compilation shows the might and power of God and how He will use it to bring His plan to its rightful completion. He's telling us the playbook so we know what to expect and what to look out for.

Regardless, those who remain steadfast to the Lord will see His face and be joyful. The revelation God provides to us through John gives us some necessary insight so we can ward off the demons of Satan and keep strong our faith right till the end, whether that be our own death or seeing the Son of Man coming in the clouds with great power and glory.

"Fear not" says the Lord many times throughout scripture. Trust in God, trust also in Christ, the Savior. When we look at the world through the prism of faith, it doesn't look scary but glorious. And for that we can all be truly thankful.

Happy Thanksgiving to you all, and may the blessings of the Lord God be upon you and your family during this holiday season.

Who Is Saule Omarova, and How Does She Use Climate Alarm to Attack Fossil Fuels and Private Banking?

By E. Calvin Beisner

Will Saule Omarova move into new digs in the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency?

Do you know who Saule Omarova is? She's President Joe Biden's nominee to lead the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency (OCC). Never heard of the OCC? It's "an independent bureau within the United States Department of the Treasury that … serves to charter, regulate, and supervise all national banks and thrift institutions and the federally licensed branches and agencies of foreign banks in the United States."

Kinda powerful.

And what would Saule Omarova want to do, if confirmed? You might think she'd want to ensure that the chartering, regulating, and supervising of banks and thrift institutions gets done right, without corruption, without unfair influence by lobbyists, etc.

You'd be wrong.

What does she want to do? Here are her own words:

"And here what I'm thinking about is primarily the coal and oil and gas industry. A lot of the smaller players in that industry are going to probably go bankrupt in short order. At least, we want them to go bankrupt if we want tackle climate change, right?"

As of 2019, about 1.7 million Americans were employed in the coal, oil, and gas industry. They'd lose their jobs. So, by implication, that's what Omarova wants.

As of 2019, coal, oil, and gas provided about 80% of all energy we use in the United States. By implication, Omarova wants us to go without all that energy.

Granted, Omarova wants to replace it with energy from wind, solar, and other "renewables"—properly called "unreliables"—which provide about 12% of our energy. But it will cost $Trillions to achieve that. So, by implication, Omarova wants us to spend those $Trillions that way rather than on food, clothing, shelter, education, transportation, communication, health care, research, recreation, and whatever else you might want to spent it on.

She said that when speaking for the Jain Family Institute's (JFI) "Social Wealth Seminar" on "her case for a US National Investment Authority." What is the Jain Family Institute? Well, its website describes it as a "nonprofit applied research organization" whose mission is "to address pressing social problems by identifying and implementing high-impact interventions that will translate to real world progress." Sounds innocuous.

But candid statements are usually more revealing. In this case, host Paul Katz, Vice President of Special Projects at JFI, explained the purpose of the "Social Wealth Seminar": "… the Social Wealth Seminar is the Jain Family Institute's ongoing virtual forum exploring strategies to manage public assets and resources in service of a more just society …."

And just what is "social wealth"? Well, one thing you can be sure of, it's not private property. It's social wealth—wealth that, presumably, belongs to the whole society. Kind of like the wealth of the former Soviet Union, Cuba, North Korea, and various other Communist countries.

What could possibly go wrong?

You get a little more idea of what JFI is all about when you read the specialties of its researchers. Of thirty (excluding "Affiliate Researchers"), nine specialize in "Universal Income." That makes "Universal Income"—i.e., income provided by taking from some what they produce and giving to others who don't produce it—obviously a key focus for JFI.

Indeed, the next most popular specialty, "Digital Ethics and Governance," is the focus of only six researchers; "Social Wealth Portfolio" has four. No other has that many.

And if you're not yet convinced that the foundations of JFI's thought are Marxist, try reading its page about "Digital Ethics and Governance." The hallmarks of Critical Legal Theory and Critical Race Theory, both birthed by the Cultural Marxism of the Frankfurt School, are all over it, e.g.: "engaging the technical knowledge and lived experience of a diverse range of academic experts"; "Are cases of algorithmic discrimination best understood as instances of disparate treatment or disparate impact, as those doctrines are applied in US law?"; "When algorithms are said to discriminate on the basis of race, what conception of race is at work?" (all italics added).

But enough of JFI. President Biden didn't nominate it to head the OCC. He nominated Saule Omarova. And despite fierce opposition, he's sticking by his nominee.

A "financial regulation professor at Cornell University," she has, according to Reuters, "faced persistent and vocal opposition from banks since her nomination was announced." Ordinarily, that would be a good reason to applaud the nomination. You never want a regulator to be a sweetheart to those she regulates.

This time's an exception.

For one thing, she favors moving all checking and saving accounts out of private banks and directly into the Federal Reserve Bank. That makes government surveillance of our financial transactions much easier—and threatens our privacy. It's also a step toward the cashless society, which has its own dangers, as James Rickards explained in a talk for Hillsdale College's Center for Constructive Alternatives November 8, 2021.

But that's mild stuff. She also advocates a "National Investment Authority what would be an independent agency that would have the power to direct public and private investment in the US." Otherwise known as Fascism—a particular brand of socialism.

Who is Saule Omarova, anyway? What kind of thinking would she bring to this position?

Well, she grew up in the Soviet Union, where in 1979–1980 she was a "Young Pioneer" (the Communist youth mass movement), graduating from high school in 1984 as a member of Komsomol, or "Young Communists." She went on to study at Moscow State University, writing her undergraduate thesis on "Karl Marx's Economic Analysis and the Theory of Revolution." Despite Senate Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs rules requiring nominees to provide copies of all their writings, she didn't provide it. Indeed, she deleted reference to it from the resume she provided to the Committee despite and in response to a request from Ranking Member Pat Toomey (R-PA) refused to provide a copy.

No problem, you think. Universities keep copies of theses, and many are available on the Web.

Omarova's isn't. Moscow State University destroyed the only copy long ago.

Oh, and the Daily Mail reports that she opposes private banking (as I noted above) and praised the Soviet Union's financial system.

But don't worry. Nothing to see. Nothing to hide. She told the Financial Times,

I was in the Soviet Union, where there was no academic freedom, and this was a mandatory assigned topic. What I wrote in that paper has nothing to do with what I believed in then or in what I believe in now. … My grandmother was orphaned because Stalin sent her entire family to Siberia and they died there.

COP 26: Radicals lose on every issue!

By David Wojick

The radical alarmists proposed a fistful of bad stuff during COP 26. A lot was in the surprise COP President's proposed decision document on the last Wednesday, with just three days to go. See my article "COP 26: With Biden's help the COP goes wild." Other ridiculous stuff was proposed by various country groups.

None of it made it whole into the final decision. Most just disappeared and what was left was rendered harmless.

Among the crazy proposals that happily went missing in action:

1. Halving emissions by 2030. Developing countries rightly called this carbon colonialism.

2. Developed countries paying reparations for developing countries' bad weather losses and damages.

3. Aid payments to developing countries of $1.3 trillion a year beginning in 2025. This is up from the already promised $100 billion a year beginning 2020, which has yet to appear.

4. Net zero emissions by mid century.

5. A tax on the sale of emission indulgences, the proceeds to go to (no surprise) developing countries.

Most of the issues are about transferring much more money from developed to developing countries. Some say this is the UN's main mission.

Among the stupid stuff rendered harmless:

A. Limiting warming to 1.5 degrees as the sole Paris Accord target. This was weakened to keeping it as the low end of the aspiration range, where it has always been.

B. Phasing out coal use by a date certain. This nonsense was changed to phasing it down at some undefined point, with support for the adversely affected coal industry.

What did survive was that National Plans will be updated again next year instead of waiting until 2025. All this really does is get already made promises into the official record, so who cares? All the stupid stuff will probably get proposed again, but it will be much easier to shoot down a second time.

They also managed to get the rules passed to set up the global market in emission indulgences. This was supposed to be the primary point of COP 26, before it went crazy.

Of course the alarmists decried the disappearance or gutting of every wacky proposal. So did the liberal mainstream (as it is wrongly called) press, but now they seem to be defending the result as real progress. It does not do to admit failure, which this debacle surely was for alarmism.

One particular about face is pretty funny. I earlier reported on the new International Energy Agency study that said if all the present promises were keep it would limit warming to just 1.8 degrees, which meets the Paris target.

During the COP this IEA result was ignored in favor of studies that failed to include these promises, so as to get a forecast well over the Paris top target of 2 degrees, typically 2.4 degrees. This was to keep the pressure on. Now I am suddenly seeing the 1.8 degrees figure quoted, as part of the claim that COP 26 was really okay.

Mind you these forecasts are all nonsense, especially given the wide range of estimates of temperature sensitivity to atmospheric CO2 levels. Even the IPCC posits a three-degree range of uncertainty, while the scientific literature shows a range over four degrees. Either way it is clearly impossible to specify the future temperature to a tenth of a degree, by the alarmists' own account. Yet there it is.

I note with amusement that the alarmists are now officially alarmed, so I got that right. The decision document says that COP "Expresses alarm and utmost concern that human activities have caused around 1.1 °C of warming to date, that impacts are already being felt in every region, and that carbon budgets consistent with achieving the Paris Agreement temperature goal are now small and being rapidly depleted".

None of these alarming claims is known to be true. They are just the IPCC's biased interpretation of the science, plus a budget that is unknowable according to the IPCC itself. The supposed budget, if it even exists, would depend on the theoretical carbon sensitivity and the degree to which that sensitivity gets expressed in reality.

That anything much happens next year at COP 27, in Egypt, remains to be seen. At least it won't be as cold as Glasgow has been for COP 26.

It is hard to sell the "last, best chance to save the world" two years in a row. Then too we are about to see a winter with terrible energy prices. If the a Republicans win a house or two in Congress just before COP 27, which seems likely, Biden will be powerless.

Unfortunately, climate alarmism seems to be inexhaustible, so get ready for another year of silly hype. It will just show how much of a failure COP 26 really was.

A delightful failure to be sure. Let's do it again!

Trillions for tribute CFACT defends

By Craig Rucker

We found out yesterday at COP 26 what John Kerry meant when he pledged "trillions" of dollars to the UN climate regime.

He meant not only direct spending of tax money, but also the largest shakedown of the financial industry in history. That's right, the bureaucrats at COP 26 are pushing the people who manage your investments, for your retirement and everything else, to forget about you, their client. Instead they intend to use your nest egg to subsidize inefficient industries and cut solid energy companies off from finance!

This is an outrageous abuse of government power that must not be allowed.

CFACT continues to push back against false climate narratives with facts. CFACT's Pete Murphy stood up at a forum by the World Meteorological Organization and asked the official question on behalf of the assembled NGO observers. Pete asked about the impact CO2 has on increasing crop yields and greening the Earth. They responded with full denial! CO2 to them is universally bad. They seem to be blissfully unaware that they were exhaling CO2 when they said so, or that they themselves are largely made from carbon, captured by plants from atmospheric CO2! How's that for denying science?

CFACT featured prominently in a "climate reality forum," sponsored by the Heartland Institute, where we were joined by Lord Christopher Monckton, whose Scotland roots run deep. We hammered home our surprise at the fine job Greta Thunberg did by labeling world leaders' virtue-signaling speeches at the COP as so much "blah, blah, blah." To ensure no one missed the point, we emblazoned "Scoldilocks'" "blah, blah, blah" on a banner and marched it before the COP in full kilt and regalia... joined by the Loch Ness monster himself!

Check out this woman's "feminist climate justice" mask. How much woke foolishness can you encapsulate in one photo? That we should surrender to Socialists who misuse the term "justice" as code for redistribution and control? That government should require us to filter out a virus with masks that don't filter? That the weather should be used to push radical feminism? As many wags have summed up the social justice warrior climate spin, "world ends, women and minorities hardest hit."

CFACT's Marc Morano picked up a new "honor" when he was named "Digital Hater No. 1" by a British leftist group calling itself the "Center for Countering Digital Hate." Apparently correcting the record on false statements about the weather is now "hate speech" which must be censored and suppressed.

If the left truly wants to see who has hate in their hearts they should look in the mirror.

CFACT stages "Blah, blah, blah" stunt to cheer on Greta

By Craig Rucker

Before COP 26 began, Greta Thunberg grabbed headlines by saying UN climate conferences were full of "Blah, Blah, Blah."

Ironically CFACT found itself -- for perhaps the first time ever -- in agreement with her!

Why? Because "Blah, Blah, Blah" seems to characterize the UN climate negotiations perfectly.

Of course, there is a marked difference between CFACT's and Greta's perspective on the matter. Greta was complaining that there wasn't enough action being taken by world leaders to stop CO2 emissions from increasing. Here she has a point. Despite all the rhetoric and promises, world CO2 emissions continue to climb – thanks principally to China and India.

But while CFACT may not find elevated CO2 emissions to be particularly troubling, it does concur with Greta that even if the world did face a crisis, the UN has proven itself to be ill suited to address it. Case in point: the supposed agreement by nations last week to ban coal that actually did no such thing – rather, it only pushed any real action to 2050.

Blah, Blah, Blah indeed.

To mark this rare occasion of agreement, CFACT took to the streets outside COP 26 to announce to the world that "skeptics and alarmists" have finally found "solidarity" at least on one point: Namely, that the UN's annual gatherings are filled with nothing but hot air.

Sporting a banner with the words -- "Amazingly Greta is correct! UN Climate COP 26 is … Blah! Blah! Blah!" -- Marc Morano and I donned traditional Scottish garb (including kilts) and paraded in front the COP 26 entrance. We were joined by "Nessie," the mythical Loch Ness monster, who came out of hiding to also show her support for our stunt.

How did it pan out?

Simply put, the attendees ate it up. Many stopped to take pictures. Others asked questions. Many were surprised that skeptics and Greta could agree on "something." Many wanted to meet and greet Nessie. No doubt there were also some hoping to see Marc and I handcuffed and thrown in jail by UN security.

The good thing, however, is we made our point to world delegates in a light-hearted, yet memorable manner. Even a Financial Times reporter on the scene was amused. He made it a point to stop and talk with us and give us his card.

The parade was a success. Expect to see CFACT continue to get its message out to the international community by whatever means possible – including street theater!

Jabbing kids and the Culture of Death: It's all about population control

By WorldTribune.com, Commentary by Joe Schaeffer

Atul Gawande is Joe Biden's nominee to lead global health development at the U.S. Agency for International Development. A surgeon at Brigham and Women's Hospital in Boston, Gawande has seen his nomination held up by Sen. Marco Rubio (R-FL) due to his horrifyingly stated defense of partial-birth abortion in a 1998 article written for the leftist news site Slate:

Grossness is not a good objection. Lots of operations are gross – leg amputations, burn surgery, removal of facial tumors, etc. But that does not make them wrong.

Atul Gawande is very excited about seeing young children receive the coronavirus vaccine. His Twitter account has retweeted the crudest forms of sick, emotional propaganda devoted to getting kids jabbed:

Gawande founded Ariadne Labs in 2012 after about a decade of planning beforehand:

Ariadne also pushes sick propaganda aimed at jabbing kids.

The Betsy Lehman Center is a Massachusetts state agency. Here is what it is up to:

We want to provide the coloring book to classrooms explaining the science of the mRNA vaccine (depicted by our heroine, Emma RNA) against the evil-doer, COVID-19, (portrayed by Spike Man). We are hoping to obtain enough funding to provide these to any classrooms and/or schools that want them. Please fill out the form below and we will ship the coloring books to you within a couple of weeks. These are most appropriate for elementary (K-5) students, yet could be distributed to middle school students (6-8) also. If we are unable to provide enough printed copies to your classroom, we will notify you and you will still have the ability to download the pdf.

Ariadne Labs has a very weird take on the vaccine. This isn't normal. This is emotionalism meant to push an agenda, not science:

The Lab is extremely plugged in to the ruling establishment. There is a virtual New World Order checklist on display here:

Ariadne Labs founder and Executive Director Dr. Atul Gawande has been named the CEO of the new Amazon, JPMorgan Chase, Berkshire Hathaway nonprofit health care organization and will transition to a new role as chairman of Ariadne Labs. He will remain a practicing surgeon at Brigham and Women's Hospital and a professor at Harvard T.H. Chan School of Public Health and Harvard Medical School.

The new appointment was announced Wednesday jointly by Amazon CEO Jeff Bezos, Berkshire Hathaway CEO Warren Buffett, and JPMorgan Chase CEO Jamie Dimon. "We said at the outset that the degree of difficulty is high and success is going to require an expert's knowledge, a beginner's mind, and a long-term orientation," said Bezos. "Atul embodies all three, and we're starting strong as we move forward in this challenging and worthwhile endeavor."

And here comes the big boom: Ariadne Labs partners with a Bill Gates population control agency:

The Bill and Melinda Gates Institute for Population and Reproductive Health at the Johns Hopkins Bloomberg School of Public Health

From the institute's history page at the Johns Hopkins website:

The Gates Institute was started in 1999 under the direction of Dr. Laurie Zabin with the mission of Scholarship and Science for Social Change, which still remains as the Institute tag line. The Institute recognized the need to develop institutional capacity in developing countries to strengthen and maintain powerful family planning and reproductive health programs and research efforts.

Hyped health pandemics are an ideal way to use "science" to enact "social change." Case in point: the coronavirus scare campaign didn't only lead to mail-in voting ballots. It also paved the way for direct mail abortion. Gates Institute Director Oying Rimon co-wrote an op-ed in the Baltimore Sun in July which stated:

In the United States, the rise in telemedicine during the pandemic included growing use of medication by mail to end unwanted pregnancies in the privacy of women's homes. Since lockdowns began in 2020, the number of states participating in an ongoing study of the service jumped from 10 to 17, plus the District of Columbia. And in April, the FDA ruled to remove guidelines that require women go to a health clinic or doctor's office to receive a medical abortion for the remainder of the pandemic.

Yes, Johns Hopkins – the people who brought you Event 201, the elitist dress rehearsal for coronavirus social curbs – is tied to the hip of a Bill Gates population control initiative. Also from the institute's history page:

Since 2002, the Gates Institute's support has enabled Hopkins faculty to collaborate with faculty from partner institutions leading to over 135 peer-reviewed journal articles. The partner institutions in turn have published over 365 articles. Journal articles have filled the knowledge gaps in population, reproductive health and family planning.

Gates founded the institute with $20 million in seed money in 1999:

Laurie Schwab Zabin, principal investigator on the project and a professor of population and family health sciences at Johns Hopkins, said the Gates gift recognizes that "building capacity, investing in human and institutional development, is the greatest contribution we can make."

Zabin was a monumental figure in the 20th Century population control movement. She served on the board at Planned Parenthood way back in 1962, 11 years before Roe v. Wade legalized abortion across America.

Zabin died at age 94 in May 2020. Johns Hopkins celebrates her long life devoted to culling the human herd:

During a three-decade association with Planned Parenthood of Maryland, she was among the first to advocate for the inclusion of family planning services within state-funded maternal health clinics. Her leadership in the Maryland chapter helped shape the national strategy of Planned Parenthood Federation of America.

As does the Gates Institute:

Before entering the research world, she served with Planned Parenthood – local, national and international – including as Acting Director and President of the Maryland affiliate. In the 1970's, she helped establish and served on the Board of Directors of the Guttmacher Institute, with a term as its Chair. In 2006, the Institute named her a lifetime emeritus director.

A Johns Hopkins statement released when she died shows Zabin especially focused on teen-agers rights to get "family planning services" without parental consent:

Zabin frequently served as an expert witness and testified before local, state, and federal government bodies in support of adolescents' access to family planning services. She was instrumental during the 1980s in securing the rights of minors to obtain contraception without parental consent. Never mind the nice words. "Family planning services" most tried-and-true "scientific method" to advance building blocks of understanding.

The scientific method also fundamentally involves ideas that haven't been proven, can't be proven, or are simply wrong: theories; observations; possibilities to be explored, and far more likely than not, to be discarded through lengthy and elaborate processes of trial and error.

There's a big difference between thinking we're likely right — having opinions — versus telling others what to believe under pain of moral peril, while smugly and disdainfully demonizing, misrepresenting, and/or entirely censoring unbelievers.

Sometimes these attacks on free and open discourse entail factual omissions, sometimes exaggerations, and sometimes downright fabricated frauds.

We're witnessing many of these occurrences happening recently. Spectacular examples involve COVID and climate reporting posing as faux science with enormously — even dangerous — consequences.

Crisis of COVID Confusion

The entirely unexpected deadly and traumatic COVID-19 pandemic has led to enormous public confusion regarding how best to minimize mortal risks to ourselves, our loved ones, and those most vulnerable.

Caught medically off guard with this new virus strain, reasonable people shouldn't have expected "experts" to immediately and accurately determine its origin, diagnose its mechanisms of contagion, nor prescribe effective preventive safeguards, therapeutic interventions, and critical-case remedies.

Nevertheless, we're since learning that much of that vital information we have depended on hasn't been scientifically competent nor honest.

There is growing evidence of a protracted political coverup of a fact that the human-engineered virus escaped from a laboratory — rather than from a wet market — in Wuhan, China as dozens of international scientists first published in a statement in the distinguished medical journal Lancet in "solidarity" with claims by Chinese colleagues.

Solidarity is a social authoritarian category, not a scientific judgment.

We have now also learned that the top medical guy in charge, Dr. Anthony Fauci, hasn't been truthful in claiming last June, "a lot of what you're seeing as attacks on me, quite frankly are attacks on science."

Fauci admitted that he first disingenuously stated that masks were ineffective in part because there was a shortage and wanted to preserve the limited supply for medical workers who needed them most … hardly a scientific or honest position.

And after repeatedly stating under oath before Congress that his National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases has "unequivocally" never funded gain-of-function research at the Wuhan laboratory that may have contributed to the pandemic, a letter to Rep. James Comer (R-Ky.) from NIH's principal deputy director, Lawrence A. Tabak, clearly says otherwise.

We're now expected to believe, based on "following the science," that a nonsensical and unprecedented federal mandate should be allowed requiring all government employees, including military personnel, to be vaccinated with Fauci's previously discredited Trump Project Warp Speed timetable miracle regardless of whether they have already gained natural immunity, work from home or have religious or medical reasons for refusal.

Moreover, why should those vaccines now be pushed upon young children with extremely low COVID morbidity risk, and yet also with no possible data to assess documented, and potentially even greater, long-term inoculation health consequences?

Climate of Controversy

Based on a new nearly 4,000-page report perfectly timed with a Halloween launch date, the UN's current Climate Change Conference in Glasgow will proclaim once again that we are facing the very last chance to save the planet from an imminently hellish human-caused fate.

Our only final last chance hope, it seems, is to immediately provide hundreds of billions of dollars in reparations to other countries for climate damage our CO2-belching smokestacks and SUVs are causing, and get on board with switching America's entire energy grid from hydrocarbons to reliance on windmills and sunbeams.

Things are, in fact, so dire that the preamble of this long-awaited draft summary release of this sixth IPCC assessment report feverishly warns that "no one is safe" from a warming planet.

Why?

Among other things, Session 13, for example, addresses a previously unchronicled new area of crisis, "Climate and Gender."

All of this is purportedly based upon "science," and don't dare disbelieve any of it at certain penalty of being labeled a "climate denier." The "climate debate is settled," they will tell you.

And what has really changed since the previous 2019 IPCC scare-fest in Madrid?

Not much.

There is absolutely no observational evidence of dangerous warming, more extreme weather, flooding of coastal cities, or any of the other horrors that the global warming alarmists attribute to increasing CO2 concentrations.

Real data shows, for example, that U.S. land-falling hurricanes and droughts are actually less frequent and severe than in the past, and the global prevalence of forest fires has actually declined about 25% since 2003.

And although the report says the rate of global sea-level rise has been increasing over the past 50 years, it fails to mention that it was increasing almost as rapidly 90 years ago before decreasing strongly for 40 years.

One thing hasn't changed a bit since Al Gore admitted on PBS regarding an October 2018 IPCC report: "The language the IPCC used in presenting it was torqued up a little bit, appropriately. How do they get the attention of policymakers around the world?"

As for saving the planet from climate change … maybe not.

Quoting Rep. Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez's former chief of staff Saikat Chakrabarti in 2020, "The interesting thing about the Green New Deal is it wasn't originally a climate thing at all … Do you guys think of it as a climate thing? … Because we really think of it as a how-do-you-change-the-entire-economy thing."

In summary, that pretty much says all about the science you really need to know.

THIS WEEK:

By Ken Haapala, President Science & Environmental Policy Project (SEPP)

The Science & Environmental Policy Project began in late 1990 as a research effort by atmospheric physicist S. Fred Singer and a handful of graduate students working out of a small office in downtownWashington, D.C.The Project had two goals: (1) to gather material for a book on global environmental issues,and (2) to conduct a survey of scientists affiliated with the UN Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change to determine the extent of what was, even then, being touted as scientific "consensus" on global warming.

What the graduate students discovered with their survey convinced Dr. Singer to set his book aside and instead to circulate among senior members of the American Meteorological Society a "Statement by Atmospheric Scientists" on greenhouse warming, which was quickly endorsed by 46 leading climatologists and atmospheric physicists (and eventually by nearly 100). That statement, issued on February 27, 1992, drew widespread media attention and was cited more than 150 times in the press. It was the first inkling journalists had that there was no scientific consensus on the reality of a global warming. Indeed, there was raging debate.

The Science & Environmental Policy Project was incorporated in the state of Virginia in 1992, and established as a nonprofit, 501(c)3 educational organization in late 1993. Today, having expanded from that core of 46 scientists, it draws on an international network of some of the finest minds in science who donate their time to promoting sound, credible, peer-reviewed research as the only basis for the health and environmental policies that affect us all.

You can help in two ways:

1. Download SEPP reports, press releases, and articles and pass them on – to newspaper editors, journalists, educators, civic leaders, and others. Help stop the fearmongering and the distortion of science.This is the most important thing you can do.

2. Support SEPP with your tax-deductible contributions. The environmental pressure groups, which present so much wrong information, have a combined clout of more than $1 billion a year.The Science & Environmental Policy Project has had far-reaching impact on less than one-hundredth of one percent of that figure. It's money well and effectively spent.

Scope: The Glasgow Follies are over. An agreement was signed, and pledges were made. Given the self-congratulatory attitudes of the participants amplified by a fawning press, it is difficult to determine exactly what was signed and how enforceable the claimed pledges are. For example, the governor of Hawaii urged that bolder action is needed than just "Net Zero Emissions." Tourism is the dominant industry in Hawaii, making up over 20% of the state's economy. To achieve below net zero, will the governor ban airline flights into Hawaii? If he does, how long will he remain governor? However, one issue seems clear, the current US administration will do what it can to damage the US oil and gas industries until voters rebel over higher energy prices.

Not wishing to speculate on what the Glasgow Follies accomplished, this TWTW will focus on a few of the glaring problems in what is called the "settled science" of the UN Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change (IPCC). The presentations by Thomas Sheahen and Howard Hayden are emphasized.

Getting It Right: In "The Theory of Gravitation" in his textbook Lectures on Physics, Richard Feynman provides an outstanding example of the development of the scientific method, a process for correcting errors and advancing knowledge of the physical world. The ancients observed the movement of the visible planets and the stars and deduced that the planets went around the sun, a concept rediscovered by mathematician and astronomer Nicolaus Copernicus in the early sixteenth century. Discovering how and why took more work.

In the late sixteenth century astronomer Tycho Brahe made a remarkable step towards solving the great controversy over the movement of the planets by asserting that the controversy could be resolved by accurate measurements of the planets in the sky. To determine something about the physical world it is better to make careful observations and experiments than to engage in deep philosophical discussions. For years, Brahe studied the positions of the planets recording them in voluminous tables.

After Brahe died, between 1609 and 1619, mathematician and astronomer Johannes Kepler used Brahe's observations to develop three laws of planetary motion: planets move in elliptical paths around the sun; they sweep out equal areas in equal times; and the squares of the periods are directly proportional to the third power of the semi-major axes.

Independently,Galileo used careful experiments to formulate the concept of inertia – if something is moving and completely undisturbed, it will continue moving in the same direction at a uniform speed. Further, Galileo used the telescope for more accurate measurement of the positions of the planets, and to discover four moons of Jupiter (which confirm Kepler's laws, though not recognized by Galileo).

Isaac Newton used the concepts of Kepler and Galileo to develop his law of universal gravitation and his laws of motion.

Careful observations from both experiments and nature were needed to develop the laws of gravity and planetary motion.

With the space age, over the past 40 years the US and others have developed powerful tools for accurately observing and measuring what is occurring in the atmosphere. These data are widely available, and numerous research groups have participated in analysis of them.

Certain US centers for climate research, such as the National Center for Atmospheric Research (NCAR) and NASA's Goddard Institute for Space Studies (NASA-GISS) participate in that analysis effort and run large GCMs (General Circulation Models) to project the climate of the future. However, most of those large models do not utilize the measurements of the atmosphere to compare and "validate" their models using physical evidence.

Those computational models predict large temperature increases in the distant future, caused by increasing carbon dioxide (CO2). That argument assumes that an increase in water vapor (the dominant greenhouse gas) will significantly amplify the warming caused by CO2. However, actual measurements show very little warming and contradict the speculation that increasing (CO2) will cause dangerous global warming.

Also unfortunately, once respected scientific journals are refusing to publish competent papers using measurements of what is actually occurring in the atmosphere because they contradict earlier speculations that is politically popular. Such entities have abandoned the scientific method for a political fad.

In 2020 W. A. van Wijngaarden and W. Happer submitted a paper on the "Dependence of Earth's Thermal Radiation on Five Most Abundant Greenhouse Gases" to the journal Atmospheric and Oceanic Physics. The paper has been ignored.

Those physicists are experts on Atomic, Molecular, and Optical physics (AMO) and spectroscopy, the study of the interaction of electromagnetic radiation and matter (including atoms and molecules). Spectroscopy is applicable to many fields of physics, chemistry, and biology. Chemist John Tyndall started using it in 1859 to study radiative heat transfer from the Earth to find why the Earth was warm enough to support life. Tyndall coined the term "greenhouse gases", the dominant one being water vapor. Tyndall realized that the greenhouse effect is critical for human existence, without it the land masses would be far too cold every night for plant life to grow. (Also, without carbon dioxide no plant life would exist.)

The van Wijngaarden and Happer paper relies on a comprehensive set of observations and calculations known as HITRAN, an acronym for high-resolution transmission molecular absorption, compiled under Air Force contract by the Atomic and Molecular Physics Division, Harvard-Smithsonian Center for Astrophysics. It is a compilation of spectroscopic parameters (defining characteristics) that can be used to predict and simulate the transmission and emission of light (electromagnetic energy) in the atmosphere.

Using these data, which apply to cloudless skies, van Wijngaarden and Happer calculate the influence that increasing water vapor, carbon dioxide, ozone, nitrous oxide, and methane have on temperatures. The observations and calculations confirm major conclusions by Tyndall and decades of laboratory experiments. Water vapor is the dominant greenhouse gas, but it is not increasing significantly with a warming planet. Further, the influence of additional carbon dioxide diminishes greatly with concentrations above one hundred parts per million in volume (ppm), which is far less than that which naturally occurs. However, carbon dioxide provides roughly twenty to twenty-five percent of the total greenhouse effect. And given the existing influence of water vapor, the influences of the other gases on global temperatures are insignificant.

At the Heartland Conference, physicist Tom Sheahen reported why the paper was an outstanding example of using the scientific method to get the physics right. The authors calculated the cumulative radiation leaving the earth, calculated what is delayed in the atmosphere, the greenhouse effect, and found that that the remainder matched satellite measurements of radiation leaving the atmosphere (going into space). Further, no one has done such thorough calculations before and showed they matched observations.

Sheahen emphasized that the agreement of calculations with observations is the key factor which certifies that their computational model is correct. That's the proper use of the scientific method. Van Wijngaarden & Happer calculated the intensity of electromagnetic radiation (infrared radiation) leaving the atmosphere above the Sahara desert (low humidity); the Mediterranean (normal humidity) representative of the temperate regions of the earth; and wintertime Antarctica. Antarctica is remarkable since the relatively warm greenhouse gases in the troposphere, [mostly CO2, O3 and H2O] radiate more to space than the thermal radiation from the cold ice surface would be through a transparent atmosphere. One can add that this is an example of the importance of convection transporting heat from the tropics to the polar regions where it is lost to space. [The temperature used in the calculations is 190 K (minus 83 C, minus 118 F)].

Sheahen underlined that agreement between theory and experiment (and observations) is THE HALLMARK of good science. The method used by van Wijngaarden and Happer (W & H) meets that criterion. Therefore, it can be trusted to make predictions about hypothetical states where the concentrations of the various gases are changed.

The model of van Wijngaarden and Happer, validated by physical evidence, was used to forecast the effects of increasing greenhouse gases on escaping radiation, which in turn affects temperatures. At current concentrations, increasing water vapor and carbon dioxide have a very small effect on temperatures; the effects are termed "saturated." The effects of increasing the other greenhouse gases are tiny.

Consequently, their method is far superior to that used in the global climate models featured in IPCC reports (and findings by NCAR and NASA-GISS). Those models begin with totally different (and highly questionable) initial assumptions, and greatly exaggerate atmospheric temperature increases compared with actual observations.

In their paper, "Methane and Climate" discussed in last week's TWTW, van Wijngaarden and Happer conclude: The net forcing increase from CH4, and CO2 is about 0.05 watts per meter squared per year.

"Other things being equal, this will cause a temperature increase of about 0.012 C [per] year. Proposals to place harsh restrictions on methane emissions because of warming fears are not justified by facts."

The same applies to restrictions on CO2 emissions. The increase calculated by W & H is about the same as reported by Roy Spencer (at University of Alabama - Huntsville): assuming a linear trend, atmospheric temperature observations over oceans have been increasing by 0.12 C per decade, derived from 42 years of satellite measurements.

The W & H paper demonstrates the folly of "climate science" ignoring critical physical evidence. As long as government "climate science" ignores physical evidence and continues to be mired in the politics of "global warming" it will stagnate just as science stagnated with philosophical discussions on the movement of planets.

Number of the Week: Number of the Week: About 20 to 25% Some may assume that because the increase in atmospheric carbon dioxide added by humans will have a small influence on global temperatures, the total influence of carbon dioxide is small. It is not. The greenhouse effect and CO2 itself are critical to life on this planet and to humanity. As Tom Sheahen states, using the calculations by van Wijngaarden and Happer, carbon dioxide contributes about 20 to 25% of today's greenhouse effect. The greatest portion of the CO2 greenhouse effect occurs at concentrations below 100 ppm (parts per million volume). At such concentrations, much, if not all, of plant life would not exist.

poor." They should have read Climate Change: The Facts 2017 before they met, especially my chapter critiquing His Holiness's energy and climate "ethics."

A key point: Climate changes due to human activities pose no catastrophic threats to people or planet.

Their horse-blindered focus on "manmade climate change" wildly exaggerates the small human influences on climate and weather – and ignores skyrocketing energy and food prices; the sporadic, unpredictable nature of wind and solar power; and that many times more people die in cold weatherthan in summer heat waves, especially sick and elderly people who can't afford to heat their homes properly.

Moreover, "caring for the poor" is very different from lifting people out of poverty – helping them use abundant, reliable, affordable, mostly fossil-fuel energy to expand economic opportunities, create jobs, and improve health, living standards and life spans. Indeed, most of the "solutions" presented in Glasgow are the antithesis of respecting human dignity, improving living standards and saving lives.

What's really being presented in Glasgow is lethal carbon-imperialism. Thousands of glitterati flew in on private jets, joining some 25,000 politicians, climateers, bureaucrats and activist journalists. They're telling the world, "We don't do sacrifice. We impose sacrifice on you commoners."

But even the International Energy Agency recognizes that any "transition" from "dangerous" fossil fuels to "clean, sustainable, renewable" energy will require unprecedented amounts of metals, minerals and other materials. Electric cars need three times more copper than gasoline-powered vehicles. Onshore wind turbines 9 times more materials per megawatt than gas-fired co-generating plants, including copper, iron, lithium, cobalt, rare earths and concrete; offshore turbines need 14 times more materials. That means far more mining, processing, manufacturing, waste disposal and habitat destruction than ever in history.

But climate fanatics hobnobbing in Glasgow, blocking DC roadways, storming federal buildings or planning to sabotage pipelines are not about to allow more mining, processing or manufacturing in the United States, Europe or most other modern countries. They've made even major copper-cobalt-nickel deposits (essential Green New Deal materials) in Alaska and Minnesota off limits.

They demand that these activities take place somewhere else – mostly in China or via Chinese-owned operations in Africa, Asia and Latin America ... often with child and slave labor ... under minimal to nonexistent pollution, workplace safety, fair wage, fair trade, mined land reclamation, and other laws, ethical standards and human dignity guidelines. It's also a path to environmental and economic disaster.

Concerns about "responsibly sourced" materials, components and products apply to T-shirts, sneakers and coffee – not to wind turbines, solar panels, backup batteries and electric vehicles for "saving the world."

Let Boston Celtics center Enes Kanter protest Uighur forced labor, rape, sterilization, torture and indoctrination on his shoes and in his Twitter videos. Like Nike and the NBA, climate-obsessed COP-26 fear-mongers will happily do business with Xi Jinping on "clean, green, renewable, sustainable" energy. That all this mining and manufacturing somewhere else will also involve prodigious amounts of gasoline, diesel, natural gas and coal – and greenhouse gases – is likewise irrelevant to COP-26ers.

Don't hold your breath waiting for President Biden, Pope Francis or Climate Envoy John Kerry to speak out about any of these climate and human rights atrocities.

Just as evil, Western banks will no longer finance fossil fuel, nuclear or even hydroelectric power. In fact, the UN's Glasgow Financial Alliance for Net Zero recently announced that financial groups with assets of $130 trillion have committed to forcing companies to cut emissions, by blocking financing for fossil fuel projects, channeling trillions of dollars to "renewable" technologies, and imposing "pathways" and demands on corporations and financial institutions to "restructure themselves."

"We now have the essential plumbing in place to move climate change from the fringes to the forefront of finance, so that every financial decision takes climate change into account," an alliance leader said – "transforming the global financial system in the process."

The US Securities and Exchange Commission plans to announce rules for "carbon disclosure" – but none for disclosing information about child and slave labor, habitat destruction and the slaughter of birds, bats and other wildlife so intimately associated with Green New Deal mining and wind and solar installations.

Even more outrageous, the Biden Administration's Labor Department has proposed a rule that would explicitly direct your retirement plan administrators and asset managers to "consider" progressive environmental, social and governance (ESG) ideologies and factors every time they choose investments. Employees would be enrolled in woke ESG funds as a default, unless they select a different option.

That means your 401(k) retirement funds could be channeled into leftist causes, all with the connivance of the Left's Wall Street, corporate and political allies – and to the enduring detriment of the world's poor.

Under these and other COP-26 agendas and edicts, US, EU, Canadian and Australian living standards would go down a few notches, to levels the Left deems "more fair and equitable" for homes, travel and diets. Poor developing countries would be restricted to improving their people's living standards to levels that sprawling wind and solar installations could support. No fossil or nuclear power for them.

Poor nations may improve their crop yields only through agro-ecology. There will be no financing for tractors, pesticides, modern fertilizers and large-scale farming, or anything possibly involving methane.

These policies are eco-imperialistic, lethal, racist and white supremacist. But the COP-26 crowd is unlikely to utter a word of concern, much less opposition; nor will it mention the energy deprivation, joblessness, nineteenth-century living standards, rampant disease, primitive stoop-labor agriculture, and premature death that their policies perpetuate.

To help drive this agenda, Big Media and Big Tech will suppress any questions and dissension – and debunk, defund, deplatform, censor and cancel anyone who tries to debate such "climate denial."

It's no wonder the Group of 77 poor countries has issued an ultimatum. They will agree to Paris-Glasgow climate/energy pledges only if rich countries give them at least $750 billion per year in reparation, compensation, mitigation and adaptation assistance. African nations and the coalition of Like-Minded Developing Countries have presented an even bigger figure at Glasgow: $1.3 trillion annually! Moreover, they want the money as grants, not loans. Who can blame them?

"Africa can't sacrifice its future prosperity for Western climate goals. Africans have a right to use reliable, cheap, energy," in conjunction with renewables, says Uganda President Yoweri Museveni. Restricting Africa to solar and wind power would impose poverty and death. Ditto for other regions.

The $750-billion number was reportedly met with silence by John Kerry. French President Emmanuel Macron said, "We should be focused on delivering the $100-billion [per year that rich countries already promised at COP-21 in Paris], before we start talking about huge numbers." ($100-billion isn't huge?)

They didn't mention the $1.3-trillion demand. Nor did anyone question how these incredible sums are going to come from now-rich nations that are also expected to hamstring their energy output and use, economies, jobs, living standards and revenues – and still come up with trillions of dollars in new aid.

Maybe that's why they plan to use your 401(k) funds and force every bank and financial institution to kowtow to their climate demands. It's time for African, Asian and other developing nations to chart their own destinies, finance their own energy – and tell all these COP-26 attendees "Let's go, Brandon!"

definitely meant abortion.

From a 1992 Baltimore Sun article:

[A] law requiring parents to be notified of abortions probably would do more harm than good, researcher Laurie S. Zabin contends.

In an article published in the July/August issue of the journal Family Planning Perspective, she found that 91 percent of the pregnant teen-agers in her study talked with a parent or guardian before deciding what to do about the pregnancy. "Certainly a goodly percentage talked to adults before the pregnancy test, but a lot more had such a talk after," said Dr. Zabin, an associate professor of population dynamics at the Johns Hopkins School of Hygiene and Public Health. "What would happen if there were a law requiring parental notification is that a far larger number of the girls would not come in for the [pregnancy] test," she said. "This would delay their getting in contact with professionals for prenatal care, or, if they so decided, for an abortion early in their term."

Of course, allowing children to get the coronavirus vaccine without parental consent has been a prominent feature of the pandemic hype pressure campaign.

There is a circle here, and it goes from the earliest days of the eugenics movement in America right up to jabbing kids with the coronavirus vaccine today.

Japan drops vax rollout, goes to Ivermectin, ENDS COVID almost overnight

Halturnerradiowshow.com

Publisher's Note:

It has come to my attention that a small web site calling itself "LeadStories.com" claims this article is not correct because THEY could find no information on any Japan Government Health Web Site about it. Clearly, THEIR inability to find something does not make this article "not correct." The simple truth is that in September, the head of the Tokyo Medical Association went on national television and told Doctors to start using Ivermectin. They did. Here we are, a little over a month later, and COVID is almost non-existent in Japan! We stand by our story.

For what it's worth, the web site "LeadStories.com" ranks 92,476 in the world. The Hal Turner Show site is much larger, ranking as 85,341 in the world. Smaller sites like LeadStories.com try to make themselves bigger, by attacking larger web sites like this one. But their shoddy journalism is evident on it's face.

In case you're interested, LeadStories.com never contacted the Hal Turner Radio Show to inquire about our story before they wrote smearing us. What kind of "journalist" writes a story without contacting the actual subject of the story? A useful idiot, maybe? Someone who is only interested in touting the party line, maybe? Someone who has an agenda to push, maybe? You be the judge.

Sweden's Public Health Agency on Wednesday recommended a temporary halt to the use of the Moderna COVID-19 vaccine among young adults, citing concerns over rare side effects to the heart. It said the pause should initially be in force until December 1, explaining that it had received evidence of an increased risk of side effects such as inflammation of the heart muscle (myocarditis) and inflammation of the pericardium (pericarditis). {link to CBS News (Secure)]

Finland, Denmark and Norway have also moved away from the COVID vaccines.

Finland last Thursday joined Sweden, Denmark and Norway in recommending against use of Moderna Inc.'s Covid-19 vaccine in younger age groups, citing risks of rare cardiovascular side effects they said warranted the precautionary steps.

Finland's Institute for Health and Welfare said last Thursday it would pause use of the Moderna vaccine among men under the age of 30, following a similar step last Wednesday by Swedish regulators. Denmark last Wednesday said it wouldn't offer the Moderna vaccine to under-18s as a precautionary measure.

Norway on Wednesday advised that all under-18s shouldn't be given the Moderna vaccine, even if they had already received one dose, and recommended that men under 30 consider getting the vaccine developed by Pfizer Inc. and BioNTech instead. Norwegian officials cited U.S., Canadian and Nordic data, saying the absolute risks remain low and calling the advice "a precautionary measure."

Who is QAnon? Lin Wood translates 'Commie' media attack on Gen. Flynn and him

By WorldTribune.com Staff, Nov. 11, 2021

On multiple occasions, dire warnings have been issued of threats to the American democracy by a group of right-wingers known as QAnon. A fence was erected around the U.S. Capitol in January to safeguard the ruling class from such allegedly violent and deranged nut cases.

Who was sounding the alarm on QAnon?

That would be the same Democrat politicians and leftist media propaganda outlets that have yet to apologize to Americans for force-feeding them a daily diet from the fictitious Trump-Russia "dossier" since 2016. That's called getting the story wrong for more than 1,000 days in a row.

The late Washington Times Editor Wesley Pruden had a 7-word Journalism Code of Ethics: "Get it first and get it right."

The Daily Beast's media "reporter" Justin Baragona wants to be clear: "QAnon, for those still unaware, is an unhinged and dangerous cult that believes there is a satanic cabal of powerful pedophiliac Democrats and liberals feeding off the lifeblood of young children."

Thanks, Justin. Could Christopher Steele provide some supporting detail?

Last weekend, Gen. Michael Flynn and attorney Lin Wood spoke at the "Preserving America" event in Springfield, Missouri.

Andrew Sullender of the Springfield News-Leader offered some corrective analysis for unsuspecting locals: "Flynn and Wood have become darlings of followers of QAnon, a wide-ranging and discredited conspiracy theory alleging a satanic cabal of pedophiles control government and culture across the globe. The group is led by 'Q' — who posted anonymously online claiming to have top-level security clearance. Though Q has not posted in more than a year, the conspiracy theory still has adherents and the FBI has labeled it a domestic terror threat."

Lin Wood offered the following salute to Andrew's journalistic integrity with the following Telegram post:

"At the end of its propaganda hit piece, the Commie Springfield News-Leader falsely attempts to smear me by linking me to the fictional 'QAnon conspiracy.'

"This is a repeat of the broken and false record the enemy keeps playing over and over again against many genuine Patriots to falsely accuse us of being 'conspiracy theorists.'

"I know that it is factually true that Q exists. I know that there are 'drops' published by Q. I know that among other things, Q openly stands against pedophilia, child sex trafficking, and satanic rituals involving children. I sure agree with those positions published by Q. They address our humanity. I want ALL individuals who have been engaged in crimes against humanity to be identified and brought swiftly to justice.

"I don't know who Q is. Do you?

"I know that Anons exist. I understand that Anons are individuals who, particularly online and digitally, research information contained in the 'Q drops.' Many of them lawfully express their conclusions from their research.

"Sure sounds lawful to me. Do you agree?

"Let's face the TRUTH.

"The term 'conspiracy theorist' was a propaganda phrase created by the CIA (an integral part of the Deep State) in the 1950's to smear individuals who did research on, and analysis of, known facts and then lawfully expressed their conclusions. Their conclusions could be right, they could be wrong.

"Sure sounds like a robust exchange of ideas allowed and encouraged by the First Amendment to me. Does it to you?

"The CIA coined the phrase 'conspiracy theorist' to falsely smear individuals and demean the TRUTH that many individuals were exposing to the public.

"I hope that helps you better understand why the CIA and the Deep State Mockingbird propagandists INVENTED the phrase 'QAnon conspiracy theorists.'

"Don't be played by the enemy. Reject the enemy's propaganda. The enemy is a liar and a deceiver.

As for the Springfield News-Leader, Wood said the article conveyed "the false accusation that General Flynn and I have called for a military coup of the country [It really does, here's the report].

"Are you kidding me?," Wood added.

Wood continued: "I have never called for a 'military coup' of our country. Such an act by the military would be a violation of our Constitution. I have always urged that We The People only engage in lawful acts recognized in our Bill of Rights such as free speech and freedom of peaceful assembly.

"My references to martial law in the past only recognize that lawful option which was employed by President Abraham Lincoln and other Presidents as historically documented.

"To equate my public comments to a call for a 'military coup' is a perversion of my public statements and is nothing more than errant nonsense.

"You recognize and understand the agenda of the Mockingbird smear tactics, don't you?

"I do.

"Keep doing the research. Keep connecting the dots. Keep drawing your own conclusions and exercising your First Amendment right to express those conclusions."

plans for the Mexican factor and instead invested $700 million to expand its Flat Rock, Michigan factor in order to make new electric, hybrid, and autonomous cars, and added 700 new jobs in the process. Left-wing activist Michael Moore spoke out, saying that "no politician—Republican or Democrat—had ever said anything like that to these executives. And it was music to the ears of people in Michigan and Ohio and Pennsylvania." He said that Trump's supporters "are not racists or rednecks; they're actually pretty decent people." He pointed out that Trump was saying the things that people who were hurting wanted to hear. Moore continued that, "Every beaten-down, nameless forgotten, working stiff that used to be part of what was once called the 'middle class', loves Trump because he is the human Molotov Cocktail that they've been waiting for; the human hand grenade that they could legally throw into the system that stole their lives from them." And that was from somebody who hated Trump.

There has never been a politician quite like Donald Trump; and there most likely will never be another again. The backlash against the person, as opposed to his policies, is archived in history as the epitome of stupidity, and resulted in the 46th president of the United States eclipsing even James Buchanan and Jimmy Carter as the worst president in American history. Even his supporters are not coming to his defense and the mainstream media is eerily silent about Trump's successor. In one short year following the senseless loss of the president who restored integrity to America, Joe Biden has overseen the loss of Kabul to the Taliban and the greatest damage to American self-confidence since the end of the Vietnam War. Even his own cheerleaders and CNN have denounced his actions. As one senior British official put it, " Biden makes Barack Obama, whose own advisers famously boasted of America 'leading from behind', look like wartime leader FDR by comparison." We have seen the humiliating surrender to Moscow over the Nord Stream 2 pipeline, the destruction of relationships with allies such as Israel, Poland, and Britain, the disastrous handling of the U.S. border crisis, and the erosion of American power globally.

The 2020 election was referred to by both Donald Trump and Joe Biden as a "fight for the soul of America." And it is clear now that this is exactly what it was. Trump's tenure witnessed getting a real crisis under control by supporting strong border security, negotiating a "Remain in Mexico" policy, forcing so-called asylum-seekers to wait outside the country while their sham applications were processed and ruled on. Trump promulgated a public health order that kept migrants out while we focused on eradicating the Wuhan Flu. Trump passed the Tax Cuts and Jobs Act, which spelled much-needed tax reform for hardworking families. He got us better trade deals by getting rid of the TPP, the Paris Agreement, the Iran Deal, UNESCO, NAFTA, and the UN Human Rights Council. He shortened wait times for veterans at the VA and expanded GI benefits. His repeal of hundreds of job-killing regulations grew the economy to record levels and truly did Make America Great Again.

During Trump's presidency the 25% lowest-paid Americans saw a 4.5% income boost, outpacing a gain in earnings of only 2.9% for the country's highest-paid workers. America became the world's largest producer and exporter of crude oil. We allowed drug imports from Canada so that prescription drug prices could fall. Trump signed the biggest wilderness protection and conservation bill in a decade, created opportunity zone incentives in 8,764 low-income neighborhoods, and created more than 7 million new jobs. African Americans and Hispanics were especially large beneficiaries of Trump accomplishments. They enjoyed record low unemployment and the Pew Research Center confirms that Black Americans made significant gains in U.S. political leadership.

While the person of Donald Trump may have vexed some of the people who benefited the most from him, his policies leave him at the top of the heap as one of the greatest presidents in American history. When guys like Michael Moore have to stand up and applaud the actions of this man, it becomes clear that Donald Trump kept his promises—especially his promises to the "Forgotten Americans." In his 2016 victory speech he gave a shout out to the "forgotten men and women of our country", announcing that they would be "forgotten no longer." Trump never forgot his promise to the farmers, factory workers and middle-class men and women who live in fly-over country and who have been historically left behind. Sadly, in 2020, while enjoying the fruits of Trump policies and in the wake of the Wuhan flu pandemic, far too many of them responded by forgetting him.

COVID-19 with Ivermectin, and the medical complex makes it hard to get a prescription.

Would our government lie about the success of a drug while mandating us to receive a "vaccine," only to take the drug in secret to combat a virus?

It seems like something out of a sci-fi movie, only it pertains to our Congress members taking Ivermectin to treat COVID-19.

Two physicians known for treating COVID-19 with Ivermectin have come out with statements saying that over 100 members of Congress were treated with Ivermectin.

The first physician is Dr. Pierre Kory, from the Front Line COVID-19 Critical Care Alliance.

He took to Twitter to share the news that between 100-200 United States Congress members (plus many of their staffers and family members) with COVID-19 received Ivermectin as treatment.

Ivermectin works, and America's top physicians know it successfully treats COVID-19.

At the same time, our government condemns Ivermectin but gets caught using it as treatment.

A perfect case of do as I say, not as I do!

Or rules for thee but not for me.

Why would Congress members take Ivermectin to treat COVID-19 if it wasn't "safe and effective?"

Hopefully, some of these members of Congress will speak to the benefits of treating their COVID-19 case with Ivermectin.

So far, three Alaskan GOP lawmakers have come out to support Ivermectin in treating COVID-19 for their residents.

Shelley Hughes, Chris Kurka, and Kevin McCabe are asking Governor Mike Dunleavy and the state health commissioner to supply Alaskans with vitamins and drugs like Ivermectin.

Senate Majority Leader Shelley Hughes says that some Alaskan physicians prescribe Ivermectin, but pharmacies aren't filling.

The three Alaskan GOP lawmakers recently testified about Ivermectin at a state pharmacy board meeting, hoping to improve Alaskans' access to Ivermectin.

Rep. McCabe mentioned that pharmacists should allow doctors to "actually be doctors and do their jobs."

McCabe testified that he thinks the patient and the doctor should be the ones to decide.

AP News has more on the story:

The board's chair, Justin Ruffridge, a Kenai Peninsula pharmacist, in a letter to the House members after the meeting noted potential legal liability for pharmacists for drugs they dispense and said pharmacists were free to use their "professional judgment" when deciding whether to fill prescriptions.

He said the board has not threatened pharmacists' licenses around the issue but said reports of misuse of ivermectin to treat COVID-19 "should give most prescribers and pharmacists reason to pause."

Ivermectin is approved to treat certain infections caused by parasites in people. Some vaccine skeptics have championed its use around COVID-19.

"Anyone who claims to be creating medical guidance and they don't have vaccine as their No. 1 recommended tool are pushing misinformation," said Coleman Cutchins, a state pharmacist. "Vaccine is our No. 1 drug for the prevention of severe disease from this virus."

The National Institutes of Health has said there is "insufficient evidence for the COVID-19 Treatment Guidelines Panel to recommend either for or against the use of ivermectin for the treatment of COVID-19. Results from adequately powered, well-designed and well-conducted clinical trials are needed to provide more specific, evidence-based guidance on the role of ivermectin in the treatment of COVID-19."

People nonetheless have sought access.

During the recent pharmacy board meeting, Rep. Ken McCarty of Chugiak expressed concern about "making sure that our state has all the medications necessary." Rep. Christopher Kurka of Wasilla told board members that "we should allow doctors the freedom, if they're using good clinical judgment, to treat their patients."

McCabe said he's heard from doctors, physician assistants and nurses in his district who are frustrated "when they issue a prescription and the pharmacy will not fill it because it's ivermectin."

Let's hope more politicians join Alaska to make Ivermectin available to all.

If it's good enough for our members of Congress, isn't it good enough for us too?

Remember this disclaimer:

I am not a doctor. I am not giving you medical advice. I'm a REPORTER. I research and I report and I give you the full story open and honestly so YOU can decide.

Kash Patel, Part II: Rosenstein threatened to investigate us 'criminally'; Fiona Hill's central role

By WorldTribune Staff, November 15, 2021

Trump insider Kash Patel drew on his first-hand, in-depth knowledge of Russiagate in an interview with the Washington Exposé podcast. The hosts noted that Patel has been in the Left's crosshairs ever since helping expose the truth about a narrative that continues to be relentlessly-disseminated after being proved false.

In 2017, then-Deputy Attorney General Rod Rosenstein signed the final surveillance warrant for Trump campaign aide Carter Page. This is a man who, according to Patel, did not know how to run the Department of Justice and even told Patel he did not understand the FISA process.

In May of 2018, Rosenstein responded with a "very personal and very hostile" attack on House Intelligence Committee Chairman Rep. Devin Nunes and chief aid Patel who were requesting records about the FBI's investigative strategy in Russiagate.

Patel continued: “We had a meeting in the SCIF [Sensitive Compartmented Information Facility], in the House Intelligence Committee space with Devin Nunes, Rod Rosenstein, Christopher Wray, and a bunch of other people to say, ‘Look give us the documents. It’s going to be embarrassing, we think, for the Department of Justice and the FBI. But that’s not a reason to not disclose it’.”

A clearly angered Rosenstein threatened to prosecute those seeking the information.

“You know what Rod Rosenstein did in that meeting?” Patel continued. “He threatened to investigate me and Devin Nunes criminally. And he threatened to subpoena us. I don’t know how this Attorney General thought that was a natural thing you can do to Congress.”

Just as shocking to former prosecutor Patel was the realization that Rosenstein, while serving as the nation’s top law enforcement officer – did not know what a FISA was. “I had to explain it to him,” Patel said.

Where did Rod Rosenstein even come from?

Patel responded: "Rod Rosenstein came from one person, Leonard Leo at the FedSoc, Federalist Society. And look, Leonard Leo gave us a lot of great judges." But, Patel added, Rosenstein "wasn't supposed to be the Attorney General, but then the Sessions fiasco happened."

Attorney General Jeff Sessions recused himself from the Russia investigation and Rosenstein "became the de facto AG, which I think got to his head and ... he got scared that he didn't know how to run the Department of Justice, which he did not," Patel said. "

Patel went on to say that Rosenstein "got the sickness that Adam Schiff, Mark Milley and all these other clowns got. They think the mission exists to serve them. And that's the difference between the 99 percent that I served with and the elitists at the top like Comey and McCabe."

The New York Post's David Marcus wrote at the time:

"What is becoming completely clear is that the Department of Justice wanted to prevent, then destroy, a Trump presidency. These were not open-minded officials being led by the facts; they were manipulating the facts and hiding exculpatory evidence to bring down Trump and his associates.

"And the news media played along like a karaoke machine, making brave heroes of James Comey, Rod Rosenstein and Andrew McCabe, who of course inked a juicy deal with CNN after being fired for lying under oath, something that Democrats usually insist is, you know, a crime. (Michael) Flynn almost went to the slammer for allegedly lying to the FBI. McCabe sits on panels about FISA reform at NYU Law School after his transgression. That really says it all."

Washington Exposé then inquired about the role in the effort to bring down Trump of the "simpering globalist" Fiona Hill, a former official at the U.S. National Security Council specializing in Russian and European affairs who was a key witness in the November 2019 House hearings impeachment inquiry during.

Patel noted: "Here's facts about Fiona Hill. One, I've never met her, spoken to her, talked to her, emailed her, or anything. She would go on to conjure up the Ukraine impeachment fiasco which was another improper way to take down a president. And President Trump was rightfully acquitted. She did that based upon this quid pro quo that didn't happen. If you want to look at a quid pro quo, maybe look at Joe Biden's conduct in the Ukraine."

As for Hill, Patel said that "the reason Fiona Hill is a problem, and John Durham's highlighting it, is because Fiona Hill, the same Ukraine hoax conjurer, goes and introduces her former research assistant Igor Danchenko, the guy that was just indicted by John Durham, she introduces him to Christopher Steele. She also introduces Igor Danchenko to Charles Dolan, the Hillary Clinton operative."

Patel continued: "And here's the kicker, during the Ukraine impeachment hearing testimony that she gave, and I'll paraphrase, but it's out there, she said that she wanted to put on the record for the world that she had no idea about the Steele dossier or what was going into it or how it was being created. Now you and your audience ask yourself this question: The lady that introduced Christopher Steele to his number one source and the lady that introduced Christopher Steele's number one source to the Hillary Clinton operative cited in John Durham's indictment, are you really saying that we should believe you had no involvement in the Steele dossier's production or formation — AFTER you told the world that the President of the United States should be impeached based on false information.

"That's why I think Fiona Hill has already been put in a grand jury by John Durham. Because she has some serious questions and she's facing the possibility of lying to Congress under oath for making that statement."

During the Trump administration, Patel would attain what would be a position he had hoped for, a spot on the National Security Council. Unfortunately, Patel said that "when you get there, you start to see that there's people like the Fiona Hill's of the world that are like 'actually we think' Rod Rosenstein, Comey, McCabe 'we're going to save America from this president.' And I said 'wasn't there just an election, didn't he get in or am I missing the point here?' "

Patel continued: "Some of the deep staters like Gina Haspel, by the way, started to come out quietly. ... And who, by the way, was the head of the CIA in London where the Russiagate nonsense started — Gina Haspel. Why do you think she stopped the disclosure of so many documents during the Trump administration? People like that and Rod Rosenstein and Milley ultimately thwarted the president's priorities because they thought they were actually saving America. They thought they could hijack the presidential election and the democratic process for their own egos. And that's exactly what they did."

The reason the deep staters, as of now, "got away with it," Patel said, "is because of the mainstream media, who are the biggest culprits in this entire process."

Big Media's role in Russiagate is why Patel said he started FightWithKash.com: "We're suing them. We're clearing people's names. Their needs to be a coursed corrective measure in the mainstream media and the only way they'll get that is with a silver bullet to their financial bottom line. And we're going to deliver it."

Hotel California Rules

what is certain, putting a nation back together after coming apart is an extremely difficult challenge. The U.S. was lucky to put itself back together after the Civil War considering an incompetent President served leading up to the war (Buchanan) and an incompetent president served after the war (Andrew Johnson). Both presidents implemented horrific policy failures, one ignoring the slavery issue, the other enacting Reconstruction. We are in a similar situation today, an incompetent president (and vice-president) implementing horrific policy failures and attacking those citizens deemed objectionable. The U.S. should take heed:

Luck is a very thin wire between survival and disaster, and not many people can keep their balance on it. Hunter S. Thompson

The polls set out in Part I tell those governing the nation the disagreements are so significant the nation could split into parts. Who knows if that split will occur but there is little trust in the federal government's leadership?

Therefore, if this nation wants to save itself form even a potential breakup, the federal government must find a compromise that allows all citizens, even those it finds objectionable, to live in freedom with the government ruling them.

Since the territory comprising the U.S. has only faced significant internal strife a few times, we have little guidance. The one-piece of wise guidance on avoiding civil war comes from an unexpected source, the Grand Duke Mikhailovich in a letter to the last Tsar of Russia in 1917. As disorganization and lawlessness manifested themselves throughout Russia, he writes:

"A situation like this cannot last long. I repeat once more – It is impossible to rule the country without paying attention to the voice of the people, without meeting their needs, without a willingness to admit that the people themselves understand their own needs."

The polls find a complete disconnect between our government, its sycophant media, and large segments of the American people. The polls find significant distrust and overwhelming disapproval for the ruling class and its media. While trust in government has been deteriorating for decades, it is now worse than ever.

The ruling class, call them oligarchs, the kakistocracy, or just out-of-touch rulers and media moguls, believe that many of the seventy-five million Americans, these "Other Americans," non-big city, religious, rural and working-class people, who do not worship the elites, belong in a " 'basket of deplorables' characterized by 'racist, sexist, homophobic, xenophobic, Islamophobic' views."

The former President Barak Obama characterized these Other Americans as: "… bitter, they cling to guns or religion or antipathy toward people who aren't like them or anti-immigrant sentiment."

As recently as July 27, 2021, a tweet by New York Times reporter identified these Other Americans as "legitimate national security threats" and "enemies of the state."

The views held by Clinton, Obama, and the New York Times about the Other Americans, are shared throughout the ruling, monied, Hollywood, socialist, academic classes, and the bureaucracy. Their views sanction a disdain that allows the elites to believe they are superior, in knowledge and culture, to the ordinary people who just want to live their lives in peace. It is why the ruling class believes it can censor objectionable speech, free violent criminals to commit more crimes on ordinary people, open the southern border allowing entry of the sick, drug dealers, slave traders, and child smugglers to invade communities around the nation.

These elite classes, with their personal security, and private jets, demand the Other Americans submit to their "utopian beliefs" that when implemented will impose costly and authoritarian programs that will regulate where these Other Americans live, what they can work at, limit what they can buy, and mandate cultural teachings repulsive to them. All in addition to a $30 trillion national debt that will eventually put the children of these Other Americans in involuntary slavery to the federal government while the elite classes exit for safer places.

The United States presently consists of two Americas co-existing within the same territory, the "Government's Elite America" and the "Other America" comprised of ordinary people. The question arises, how can these two Americas continue to live in the same nation?

Does the theoretical role of states to restrain federal overreach still exist?

Under the U.S. Supreme Court's decision in Texas v. White, an 1868 case determining the status of Texas after the Civil War, it held the United States is an indestructible Union, composed of indestructible states. The court did, however, note – "By the perpetuity and indissolubility of the Union, by no means implies the loss of distinct and individual existence, or of the right of self-government by the States." The key point is states have the right to self-government within the indissoluble union.

According to the White court, change in the structure of the Union can only occur through revolution or the consent of the states. Any revolution would be quickly and violently put down by massive federal force. And the Constitutional requirements for securing the consent of the states for any secession is almost impossible. Under this very narrow reading of White, it appears to the two Americas must live together with no matter how poorly they get along or how disastrously the Other Americans are treated by the federal government.

A more liberal reading of White, however, offers a path for the two Americas to live in harmony. Since White holds states do not lose their distinct and individual existence, or of their right of self-government and Article IV of the Constitution mandates the federal government guarantee every state in the Union a Republican form of government, the Constitution theoretically restricts the power of the federal government to limit democracy and freedom in the respective states. How a future Supreme Court balances the indissolubility of the union against a state's right of self-government and having a Republican form of government, will determine whether our nation stays together or divides.

Before discussing options for the peaceful living arrangements for the two Americas, which will be Part IV, it is necessary to set forth how the federal government has manipulated the perpetuity and indissolubility of the Union to diminish states' right to self-government.

Breaking up is merely wishful thinking

There are writers who claim portions of the U.S. have wanted to split since its inception. These writers have a complete revisionist history of the U.S. by asserting there was dissension from the beginning. There is always that unhappy portion of anyplace USA. In the aftermath of Brexit, these writers held false hope of the U.S. undergoing a Brexit experience. They speculated about future Republics in Texas, California, or Vermont. They dubbed them, Texit, Calexit, and Verexit. The basis for such hope rests with Texas and California being independent Republics, and Vermont being an independent state, before becoming part of the Union. Once these states voluntarily joined the Union, a no-fault separation was buried in "that great dust-heap called 'history."

Another branch of the theory is there were many Republics in the territory now the U.S., so we can have many again. They point to the State of Muskogee, a multicultural Republic of Native Americans and an independent Republic of West Florida (part of today's Louisiana). Both were short-lived before the U.S. Constitution. While interesting reading, if there is a real interest in the issue, one should read fiction - Cascadia, a progressive, green republic carved out of parts of California, Oregon and Washington, and a few other western states.

The Constitution, Congress, the U.S. Supreme Court, and massive and overwhelming military power make it impossible for any state to leave federal control without federal approval. President Biden made this point very clear when he stated that "…any insurrectionists would need a lot more guns to take on the nuclear-armed US government." Anyone challenging the federal government should take Biden's words as both a threat and a promise. But then there is the collapse of the USSR in 1991? So, one never knows what the future will bring, especially during an incompetent presidency?

States cannot organize into a new state or join another state to secure more freedom for their citizens without federal approval

The more possible large-scale change could be a few states reorganizing into new states or parts of states joining other states. The goal of such an effort is when the inhabitants of one part of the state desire to be free of the regulation, taxes, and massive bureaucracy of the dominant part of the state. The clearest, long-running example is the state of Jefferson. Parts of Northern California and Southern Oregon would join together to form a new state, a mostly rural state. The first legislation to create the state was introduced in 1852 and a state of Jefferson movement was formally organized in 1941.

Establishing new states out of existing states has occurred several times. Moreover, Article IV, section 3 of the U.S. Constitution permits it with the consent of the state legislatures of the states concerned and the approval of Congress. Until 1792, Kentucky was part of Virginia. Maine was part of Massachusetts until 1820 and West Virginia was part of Virginia until 1863.

Of the fifty states in the Union, there have been attempts, even several on-going, in thirty-one states to undertake some form of reorganization, i.e., mostly the rural parts of states want separation from the urban parts. The most serious current effort concerns three-fourths of Oregon (the rural areas and the southern coast of Oregon) joining Idaho. Seven of thirty-six Oregon Counties, by significant margins, have voted in favor of relocating parts of the Oregon border into Idaho. For this reorganization to succeed, the legislatures of Oregon and Idaho must approve it, as well as Congress.

While it is constitutionally possible to restructure a state or a part of a state into a new state or let it join another state, it is an extremely difficult undertaking. The power structures of the states are unlikely to approve of any group of subjects and their tax revenue, leaving to another state. The last successful effort was West Virginia separating from Virginia during the Civil War. The proponents of the new state of West Virginia had the Union Army on its side. In power arrangements involving governments, there is only one rule - "Might makes right."

Fr. James Altman breaks silence, calls out bishops who pushed 'the feardemic' by closing churches

'The greatest disgrace of the bishops over the past 18 months has been that they denied people access to sacramental grace and endangered their eternal souls.'

By Pierre Boralevi

(LifeSiteNews) — Canceled priest Fr. James Altman has condemned the U.S bishops for "betraying their flock" by "depriving them of sacramental grace," in an exclusive interview with LifeSiteNews.

Altman sat down with LifeSiteNews correspondent Jim Hale to discuss his recent suspension by Bishop William Patrick Callahan of the Diocese of La Crosse, Wisconsin, and said the bishops have forsaken their flock and left their children starving.

Fr. James Altman

"What kind of father won't feed their children?" he asked. "They let their people starve!"

Altman is most widely known for his video message You can't be a Catholic and a Democrat, which he delivered last year ahead of the 2020 presidential election.

In the video, which went viral, Fr. Altman spoke against those claiming to be devout Catholics while supporting pro-abortion politicians from the Democratic Party such as now-President Joe Biden.

For this, and in spite of strong public support from conservative and traditional Catholics, Altman was first threatened with canonical penalties by Bishop Callahan and later asked to resign.

When he refused to do so, Callahan suspended him.

Altman shared his ordeal with Hale, including having to move houses with his elderly parents who are both in their 90s. He also shed some light on his current canonical status.

"Being canceled doesn't mean you're not a priest," he said. "I'm a priest forever, every priest who has been canceled is a priest forever."

He appealed to Rome, but the process could take a year or more. In the meantime, he described his status as a canonical "limbo."

Altman was very clear that he could still tend to souls.

"You can tend to [anybody's] sacramental need," he said. "You can and must take care of their eternal souls."

Altman condemned the bishops for closing down churches and denying sacraments to the faithful, which took place all over the country during the COVID lockdowns.

"The greatest disgrace of the bishops over the past 18 months has been that they denied people access to sacramental grace and endangered their eternal souls," he said. "People worry about my manner and tone, I'm a little concerned about the eternal souls … they should be a little bit more concerned about the eternal souls, and they're not!"

He went even further in condemning the bishops and accused them of betraying their office and their flock.

Altman explained that the faithful have been feeling increasingly abandoned by their pastors, which he says is the reason why they turn to him, and why the bishops, whom he called "false shepherds," criticize him.

"That's why they don't like me, because I just point [it] out," he said. "And you know what, the flock know it. That why they even bother to listen to me. [There are] 37,500 priests in the U.S, why does anybody want to listen to me?"

"Because they know I'm speaking to their [very] soul when they feel abandoned by these false shepherds."

Because of his current suspension, Altman is now unable to celebrate Mass publicly in his own parish of Saint James the Less in La Crosse, or anywhere else.

He pointed out a striking contrast in the attitude of the U.S. hierarchy and compared the harsh treatment he received to the leniency shown to notorious homosexual predators in the Church.

"They didn't laicize child molesters, boy molesters I should say because that's what it was," he said.

Altman opined that the hierarchy itself has many homosexual predators among its ranks, which he said explains why these priests are protected. He referred to an estimation by LGBT supporter Fr. James Martin, that up to 40% of priests in the U.S could be homosexuals.

"If it was 40%, I wouldn't be surprised; if it was 80%, I wouldn't be surprised," Martin told CBS back in March of this year.

Altman argued that a high percentage of predators among the episcopacy could explain why so many molester priests are protected.

"The bishops have protected so many and covered up for so many because they are in essence covering up for themselves," he said.

Regarding the possibility of Fr. James Martin being made a cardinal in the future, Altman commented that he "wouldn't put it past the current bishop of Rome to do that," and mentioned the case of serial abuser ex-cardinal McCarrick.

"The bishop of Rome is buds with McCarrick, and we all know about McCarrick," he said.

He also referred to the late cardinal Danneels, who was caught on tape urging sexual abuse victims to silence.

Hale then asked Altman to comment on the injustice that was done to him and the harm that was done to his parishioners when he was removed from his parish.

"What people out there need to understand is that [the bishops] don't care about them, they're not fathers," said Altman.

Talking about his own diocesan bishop, Altman argued that the bishop removing his faculties was proof that he didn't care about him or his flock.

"He doesn't give a care about me, or he would never have ripped me away from my family; and he doesn't care about my parish family or he wouldn't have ripped their father away from them," he said.

Altman then reiterated his condemnation of U.S bishops' closure of churches last year.

"What kind of father won't feed their children?" he asked. "They let their people starve!"

The priest explained that what keeps him going is the knowledge that God allows injustice, and that the crucifix is a reminder of that fact.

"All is for the salvation of souls," he said, quoting Bishop Athanasius Schneider. "I fear no miter, what I fear is standing one day before Jesus."

He quoted Cardinal Raymond Burke who once stated: "When I die, I will appear before the Lord to give an account of my service as bishop, not before the USCCB."

Bishop calls for renewed opposition to 'diabolical' culture of death: 'We have aborted the plan of God'

Bishop Strickland called the destruction of life through abortion 'poverty,' and said each individual child killed has been a lost contribution to the world.

By LifeSiteNews Staff

(LifeSiteNews) — In this week's episode of The Bishop Strickland Show, Bishop Joseph Strickland addressed a recent tweet and called on people to realize the connections to abortion in our culture.

Co-host of the show Terry Barber asked the bishop of Tyler, Texas, to comment on an October 27 tweet, in which Strickland said that "any connection to slaughtered unborn children is simply unacceptable."

I don't claim to have all the answers but I am willing to speak up because any connection to slaughtered unborn children is simply unacceptable. If we really believe unborn lives are sacred gifts from God how can we remain silent.

- Bishop J. Strickland (@Bishopoftyler) October 27, 2021

Bishop Strickland called the destruction of life through abortion "poverty," and said each individual child killed has been a lost contribution to the world. "We have aborted the plan," he said. "Not just the individual child, but the plan of God."

Strickland called this "diabolical" and blasted any connection to abortion, making a possible reference to the abortion-tainted COVID jabs. He added that this "is something that we should oppose because it's built on lies" and death.

Problems With Our Wisconsin Election Laws from an Inside Perspective

By Mark Gabriel

I have been a Chief Election Inspector at poll locations in the City of Appleton for about 10 years now. I want to say upfront, that I believe in the rule of law, so I have sought to follow the election laws to the best of my ability. This article will explain that we have problems with some of our election laws. Even though, I do not agree with some of them, I have followed them along with the directions of my City Clerk.

On election day for the 2020 Presidential Election, I stopped a Lawrence University student from casting a ballot in Wisconsin after he had previously voted absentee in his home state of Utah for the same election. When I questioned him, this student had a tally slip in his hand, which means that all he had to do in order to vote twice in that election for President, was hand in his tally slip at the ballot table and pick up another ballot to vote. When I confronted him, he admitted to having voted previously and he agreed to give me the tally slip and leave the polling location immediately. I say this, as an example, to prove that we have problems.

Except for Voter ID, the laws have gotten more and more lax. Examples of this are: Letting electors vote absentee, or in-person up to three weeks early, for any reason, or no reason, letting people register to vote on election day, allowing exceptions for voter ID, letting people vote without proof of citizenship, accepting more and more forms of ID and ways to prove residency, and allowing the vote count tabulation machines to report vote totals by internal modems, rather than calling them in by hand as we always used to do. Candidates should be able to request a hand count of the vote from the paper ballots to assure vote count confidence. In my run for City Alderman this year, I was denied that request. The Department of Motor Vehicles should not be in the voter registration business either. I will say more later about this misguided idea of pushing everyone to vote.

The 2020 Fall General Election had more exceptions, changes and modifications due to the false pandemic to further corrupt our election process, such as: letting ballots sit in drop boxes around various cities, letting ballots be handled by non-election inspectors and giving them access to the Wisconsin State Voting List. It was Facebook's Zuckerberg that gave millions of dollars to the five largest cities in Wisconsin (all run by Democrat Mayors) in order for such special access. During my Alderman campaign, the City Clerk's office refused my request to look up an address on the voter list of someone I had talked to who had agreed to take a yard sign. I was informed that I would have to buy the list from the State. Yet, Zuckerberg's people who were all leftist, Democrats, had as much access as they wanted to the State-wide list. That access was likely used to see who had not yet voted, so they could go around getting more votes from people with no ID who agreed to say that they were "indefinitely confined." That was criminal! They should never have been given authority like that. Money talks, however, and the cities sure liked the money they got from Zuckerberg. Governor Evers vetoed the bill that would have made that a crime in future elections.

There are serious problems with laws and court directives that make it easier and easier for everyone and anyone to vote. The law says that even a drunk on a park bench can vote, if he has a signed form from a housing authority that the bench is his home. I am not kidding! Who would be more likely to utilize such a law, the homeless person, or someone that wants to manipulate the votes of homeless people by giving them something in exchange for a vote for a certain candidate? The push to make people in general vote, who only have selfish reasons to vote, is wrong! I do not include Christians who for righteousness' sake and love for their town, city and nation, ought to vote based on God's principles of right and wrong! Christians have a duty to vote, and with a Godly Standard. If an adult resident in Wisconsin does not follow politics, knows little about the candidates or their positions, they should not vote! In other words, an elector should show their own interest in wanting to vote, otherwise people who are indifferent can be manipulated by others. They become a commodity, if you will, that can in essence be bought and sold. This is one of the crimes that occurred in the 2020 "Pandemic" Election and the massive move to make it easy for people to vote.

Those laws put a great deal of pressure on Election Inspectors. At our polling location, for example, we have had to devote an entire line to new voters on election day, just to register them to vote. If they did not care enough about registering to vote ahead of time, they should not be allowed to vote on election day! This would ensure that only registered voters can vote and we would not have electors being dragged to the polls by others, or bribed into voting for a particular candidate. Manipulating someone to vote for the manipulator's preferred candidate, is just as bad as suppressing someone's vote, who actually wants to vote. Also, when registering to vote, people should have to, not only prove their identity and location of residency in Wisconsin, but that they are a U.S. citizen as well! We simply take their word for it; no proof is required! With recent administrations encouraging illegal immigration (Trump's excepted), we need to require proof of citizenship. We should also not allow busloads of people to show up at polling locations, or professors bringing their entire class to vote, as we have seen from Lawrence University. This just smacks of voter manipulation.

The Wisconsin Election Commission (WEC) is not doing their job to maintain a clean and accurate voter registration list for Wisconsin. There are many more registered voters on record than we have adults in Wisconsin by population! That means that deceased residents, those who have moved out of State, or those who simply have decided not to vote anymore, have not been taken off the records and criminals can use those names to place extra votes for their preferred candidate. Our State Legislature is ultimately responsible for the WEC and our entire election system. We need to hold them responsible! I encourage Christians to know your State Representative and State Senator! Have their phone numbers in your contact list and text them too! To see a list of all your elected officials, go to: https://myvote.wi.gov/en-us/My-Elected-Officials and enter your home address. Then you will see the name of your Congressman, State Senator and State Rep, under the list of State Supreme Court Justices.

The Tanker War

"They that go down to the sea in ships, that do business in great waters; These see the works of the Lord, and his wonders in the deep." Psalm 107:23-24

By Riley J. Hood—Milwaukee County Constitution Party

Naval strength is an important part of making a nation strong. One only has to see the backed-up docks and the resulting shortages to realize, that shipping lanes have not been replaced with air cargo. Many a Navy vet describes his service as doing a job. Still, there are the risks they take. Pearl Harbor comes to mind, but even WWII events like the US Indianapolis being sunk, or the US Naval forces on station off of Okinawa are relatively unknown. After the Korean War, some of our ships were attacked, and after Vietnam, the USS Mayaguez was seized by pirates. Least known, was the Tanker War in the Persian Gulf.

In the 1980's, Iran and Iraq were at war. Both Islamic countries weren't content to murder each other on mass. Both used chemical weapons on each other. They started attacking merchant vessels doing business with their enemy. Oil tankers provided slow moving targets. The violence is generally dated from May 1981 to August 4, 1988. In 1981, Iraq began attacking ships carrying military supplies to the front and then started attacking Iranian exports. According to the Strauss Center, "Iraq used its air power to enforce its threats, primarily Super Frelon helicopters, F-1 Mirage and MiG-23 fighters armed with Exocet anti-ship cruise missiles." Iran retaliated. Things escalated in 1984. The Iraqi's now had French Super-Entard fighters, and Iran had more ability to retaliate. Iran started using air-to-surface missiles against ships instead of tanks, including Mavericks and A-12s. It wasn't efficient for ship sinking, but damage done, and crewmen killed.

For example: On May 30, 1982: Atlas I, a Turkish oil tanker, becomes the first tanker to be hit, damaged by Iraqi bombs. December 18, 1982: Greek tanker, Scapmount was hit by an Iraqi Exocet. February 14, 1985: Neptunia, a Liberian tanker, was hit in the engine room by another Iraqi Exocet. The tanker sinks three days later due to an explosion. November 1, 1986: Kuwait appeals to the international community to protect its shipping interests in the Gulf. March 7, 1987: In response to a Soviet offer to protect Kuwaiti shipping, the US announces its decision to re-flag Kuwaiti tankers. By 1987, both Iran and Iraq were mine laying and using cruise missiles. The Iranians were deploying their F-4 Phantoms and F-14 Tomcats again.

On May 17, 1987, the USS Stark (FFG-31) was struck by two Iraqi Exocet missiles, fired from an Iraqi F1 by a pilot who thought the frigate was an Iranian tanker. 37 sailors died. February 12, 1987 two US helicopters escorting a convoy were fired on by Iran. In March 5, Iranians sent speed boats to attack American barges, and the next day Iran fired on more US helicopters.

September 21,1987, US Helicopters hit and set on fire the Iran Air, caught laying mines. 3 men were killed, and 26 more captured. The Iran Air was later sunk. October 8th, 1987, US Helicopters returned fire, sinking three Iranian gunboats. On October 15th, an American tanker was struck by an Iranian missile. On October 16th, the reflagged Sea Isle City was also hit. On October 19th, America fired on Iran's Rashadat oil platform.

On April 14th, 1988 the guided missile frigate, USS Samuel B. Roberts (FFG-58) was severely damaged by an Iranian mine. 10 sailors were injured. America retaliated, by destroying two Irani oil platforms, a patrol boat, and a frigate. Another frigate and four small craft were damaged. All of this happened during Operation Praying Mantis, which was a follow up to 1987's Operation Nimble Archer. The attack took place on April 18th, in Iranian waters, and by that time half the Iranian Navy was sunk or damaged. On at least one of the abandoned oil platforms there was a firefight. After the fight, the Marines boarded, took prisoners, and detonating the structure. The group then destroyed another platform.

On July 3rd, 1988 the USS Vincennes, was escorting the Samuel B. Roberts being towed back to the US. It mistook Iran Air Flight 655, for an attacking fighter, killing all 290 crew and passengers.

August 8, 1988: Iran and Iraq agree to a cease-fire. Lloyds of London reported 107 tankers attacked in 1986, and 178 in 1987. LOL said over 335 ships were attacked and 212 merchant seamen died. There was much more to the Tanker War than I mentioned here. Navy Seals were involved, and the USS Enterprise, USS Truxtun, USS Merrill, USS Lynde McCormick, USS Trenton, USS Wainwright USS Simpson USS Bagley were all in the Gulf, and many more were.

America was selling weapons to both sides, and by that, I mean Iran. Until September 29th, 1987, America bought Iranian crude oil. The aftermath is Islamic history, were we attacked and eventually invaded Iraq, and that benefits Iran. Iran has long since rebuilt and expanded its navy. Today, our Navy is not the largest, China's is.

The Milwaukee County Constitution party thanks Navy vets for their service, including the service that many distracted Americans during "peace time" ignore. And while this article is about the US Navy, we would apply that to any serviceman or veteran. Concern for military policy should be a concern for every veteran. It is time for patriots in Milwaukee County to fight for their hometown by joining us and taking action.

The Muslim Report: Algeria

"Sanctify them through thy truth: thy word is truth." John 17:17

By Riley J. Hood—Milwaukee County Constitution Party

Christians in Algeria have had their Church buildings closed since the beginning of 2018. Three more Churches have been ordered to close, in Oran. The orders were issued on July 4th and July 7th, of 2021.

A 43yr-old father of four was sentenced to five years in prison for showing a caricature of Muhamad on social media. This is a maximum sentence, and two other Christians were convicted of blasphemy but were given shorter sentences.

One brother states that the Algerian Church, "grows where it can it the cracks of a closed society." The People's Democratic Republic of Algeria didn't need Covid-19 or the Covid-19 Democrat Variant to close-down churches in Algeria, they closed down church buildings because their Islamic views can't abide the truth of Christianity.

The Muslim Report: Honor Killing in Israel

"Knowing this, that the law is not made for a righteous man, but for the lawless and disobedient, for the ungodly and for sinners, for unholy and profane, for murderers of fathers and murderers of mothers, for manslayers," I Timothy 1:9

By Riley J. Hood—Milwaukee County Constitution Party

Israel, is America's most important ally in the Middle East. I am not a dispensationalist, with dates and charts made by men on the walls of my house, but I agree with a nation of Israel, and affirm their traditional homeland. It is their right to repossess their land. Another plus is that they are not Muslims. While far from being a Messianic State, they are an island of sanity, in the midst of typical Islamic insanity. Having said that, there are Islamic Israelis, namely of Arabic descent, who owned property or were living there before 1948.

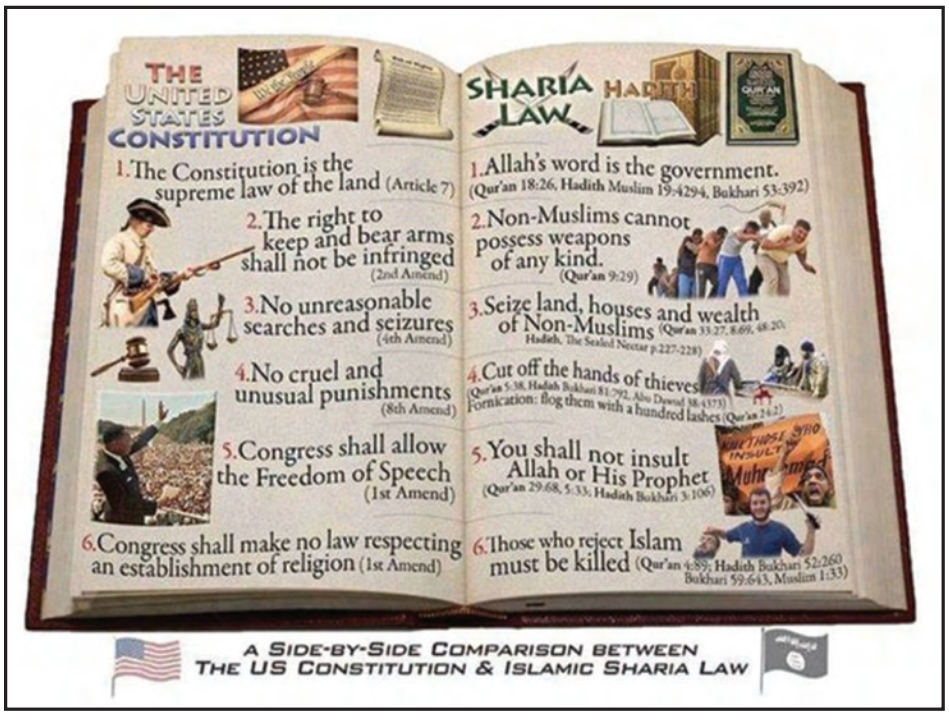
Here is the story of one devout young Muslim, from the September 27th, 2021 edition of timesofisrael.com, "Man charged with murdering his mother because she converted to Christianity. Indictment says 27-year-old Muad Hib from Zarzir hid 46-year-old Rasha Muklasha's corpse near the Jordan River last month."

TOI writes that the Muslim "was charged on Monday with murdering his mother and hiding her body last month, after she converted from Islam to Orthodox Christianity. According to the charge sheet, Rasha Muklasha, 46, left her husband and severed ties with her five children including the suspect, Muad Hib in 2006. She then moved from the town of Zarzir to Nof HaGalil and converted to Christianity."

Rasha reestablished contact with her children after her ex-husband's death. That gave her son knowledge of her whereabouts, and facilitated his crime. The report says, "According to the indictment, the murder was premediated, with Hib setting up a meeting with his mother on August 5 near Nazareth with the intention of killing her and disposing of her remains." He then strangled his own mother. He rammed through a couple of roadblocks, which led to his arrest after he was chased.

A police spokesman said, "the case proved the police's full commitment to solving crime in the Arab community, using all means at our disposal." But some Muslims are screaming about selective enforcement. TOI comments, "Violent crime has risen to record levels in Arab communities in recent years, with 78 Arab Israeli citizens killed in apparent homicides since 2021 began, according to a tally by the Abraham Initiatives nonprofit. Another 15 Palestinians have been killed in Israeli territory. Last year, 96 Arab Israelis were killed in communal violence." While some Muslims scream selective enforcement others like #Arab Lives Matter protest a lack of protection. Prime Minister Naftali Bennet called the crime in Arab communities a "national calamity."

Quite frankly #Arab Lives Matter might as well be #Intifada or #Jihad, but what it really is, is #Islam. This Muslim who murdered his mother was a devout Muslim acting in obedience to the Quran. He was not a terrorist or Islamist Extremist, or any other of those candy-coated non-sense terms that weak willed Americans grope for in an illusory effort to excuse the existence of the Muslim among us. They are Muslims, the Quran is about violence and slavery. Israel has other crime problems, but it also has Muslim problems.



The Muslim Report: Vanuatu

"If any man love not the Lord Jesus Christ, let him be Anathema Maranatha." I Corinthians 16:22

By Riley J. Hood—Milwaukee County Constitution Party

In 1978 a man went to India, to train as a Bible Translator and was converted to Islam. The story sounds like rubbish to me, but apostasy happens. His family became Islamic. By 2007, Islam spread to other parts of Vanuatu. Most noticeably by the building of Mosques, which are bases from which Muslim's attack.

The Vanuatu Constitution states that their nation was "traditional Melanesian values of faith in God and Christian principles." In 2017, the President said, "We have one religion in Vanuatu, and that is Christianity." We have declared this nation in Yahweh's name and no other God." While you have the majority, then unite, defeat the Muslims, and dismiss them. Expel the hate-filled interloper while you still have a country, because libertarian anarchy, and secularist appeasement are lazy short cuts to disaster. Look what has happened to Lebanon. Turkey, or Nigeria, is that what you want?

The Milwaukee County Constitution Party affirms the goodness of the Vanuatu Constitution, and we assert that America was not founded on Masonic secularism, or French Revolution enlightenment. We would also point out that Supreme Court cases affirmed that Christianity was embedded into the common law of our America nation-state, which such heritage has been squandered and must be restored.

Japan drops vax rollout

The European Medicines Agency said Thursday that new preliminary data from the Nordic countries supports a warning the agency adopted in July that inflammatory heart conditions called myocarditis and pericarditis can occur in very rare cases following vaccination with Covid-19 shots made by Moderna and Pfizer-BioNTech.

By far, however, the absolute superstar among foreign nations dealing with COVID is Japan. Japan has PULLED the vaccines and substituted Ivermectin - and in one month, wiped COVID out in that country!

Any questions?

Just so you understand the timeline.

By September deaths from the COVID-19 Vaccine jabs were being investigated.

At roughly that time, the vials were under scrutiny and metal "magnetic" material was found in them.

Very shortly thereafter, the Japanese minister of health announced doctors could prescribe Ivermectin.

A month later, the Western press is shocked that COVID has all but disappeared from the island.

Get it?

Understand?

This is what it looks like in a country that still has rule of law. The governemnt responds to reports of death and contaminated vaxes, moves to real treatment, people get better, and the virus disappears.

Now compare that to what is happening in the United States and in Australia and New Zealand. All three countries are in dismal failure in their handling of COVID-19, and that failure has resulted in staggering loss of freedom and destruction of commerce.

This is the biggest news story right now.

Japan has ended COVID. It did it after it

RFK Jr.: Covid tyrants getting rich, 'engineering destruction of democracy worldwide'

By WorldTribune Staff, November 15, 2021

Authoritarian officials have constructed the "Covid misinformation" narrative and are colluding with tech "titans" to bring about "the destruction of our democracy and civil rights," Democrat Robert F. Kennedy Jr. said.

Covid tyrants, Big Tech and Big Media are "engineering the destruction of democracy worldwide," Kennedy said during a protest rally in Switzerland.

Switzerland, which has been successful in mitigating Covid without strict mandates, is set to hold a public vote at the end of this month to decide whether the government's newly proposed Covid laws can go into effect. If they are enacted, Switzerland would adopt many of the restrictions that have been imposed throughout the EU.

Kennedy told the crowd that, right now, Switzerland is Europe's "last bastion of freedom."

"When they use the term 'vaccine misinformation,' they are using it as a euphemism for any statement that departs from official government policies and pharmaceutical industry profit taking," Kennedy said.

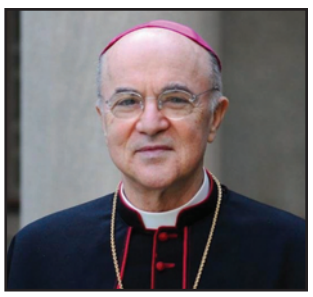
"It [misinformation] has nothing to do with whether it's true or false, it only has to do with what the political implications are," Kennedy added. "And who is doing this censorship? It's government officials in league with Bill Gates – with Larry Ellison – with Mark Zuckerberg – with Sergey Brin from Google – and with all of these Internet titans."

Kennedy pointed out that it is no coincidence that companies like Facebook, Google, and Twitter are the ones censoring criticism of the government policies that are making them rich.

"The Fauci-funded China pandemic has resulted in the greatest mass transfer of wealth to a small handful of individuals in human history," Gateway Pundit's Julian Conradson noted. "Over $3.2 TRILLION has shifted into the net worth of the uber-wealthy – directly coming out of the working class – which has resulted in approximately 500 new billionaires since the beginning of last year."

Abp. Viganò warns US bishops about COVID jab: The Great Reset wants 'billions of chronically ill people'

(LifeSiteNews) – Editor's note: Archbishop Carlo Maria Viganò has decided to make public an October 23 letter sent to to Cardinal Luis F. Ladaria S.J., Prefect of the Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith, Archbishop José Gomez, President of the United States Conference of Catholic Bishops, as well as to all the bishops of the United States of America.



Your Eminences,
Your Excellencies,

I address you, Archbishop Gómez, as President of the United States Conference of Catholic Bishops, and to you, Cardinals Ladaria and Müller, for your competence, some serious considerations related to the so-called vaccines against Covid-19.

I believe there are some aspects of the question that now allow for a more complete evaluation of what these drugs are and what effects they cause; this evaluation ought to lead to a collegial stance, in conformity with the Magisterium of the Church and not influenced by biased information or by erroneous news spread by the producers of these drugs or by the media.

1.Subject of the Note of the Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith

The Note on the morality of using some anti-Covid-19 vaccines was issued last year in the absence of complete data on both the nature of the gene serum and its components. I point out to you that the subject of the Note is limited to "the moral aspects of the use of the vaccines against Covid-19 that have been developed from cell lines derived from tissues obtained from two fetuses that were not spontaneously aborted,"[1] and it states that "[w]e do not intend to judge the safety and efficacy of these vaccines, although ethically relevant and necessary, as this evaluation is the responsibility of biomedical researchers and drug agencies."[2] Safety and effectiveness are thus not the subject of the Note, which in expressing its opinion about the "morality of use" therefore does not even express its opinion about the "morality of production" of these drugs.

2.Safety and effectiveness of the vaccines

The safety and effectiveness of individual vaccines is determined after a period of experimentation that normally lasts for several years. In this case, the health authorities have decided to carry out experimentation on the entire world population, as an exception to the usual practice of the scientific community, international standards, and the laws of individual nations. This means that the entire population finds itself in the condition of being susceptible to suffering the adverse effects of the vaccine, at their own risk, when normally experimentation is done on a voluntary basis and carried out on a limited number of subjects, who are paid to undergo it.

I think it is clear that this is an experimental drug that has not been approved,[3] but only authorized for administration by the bodies in charge; just as I think it is evident that there are medical treatments without adverse side-effects, even though they have been systematically boycotted by the Health Institutions – WHO, CDC, EMA – and by mainstream media. Even if the Church should express a moral evaluation of the different treatments available – some of which are carried out with drugs produced with cell lines that originated in an aborted fetus, like the vaccines – it must be reiterated that there are effective treatments which cure patients and allow them to develop permanent natural immune defenses, something that the vaccines do not do. Furthermore, these treatments do not cause serious side effects, since the drugs that are used have been licensed for decades.

Other recently developed treatments are absolutely effective, inexpensive, and carry no danger for those who receive them: this is the case with the plasma treatment studied and employed with great success by the Italian doctor Giuseppe De Donno.[4]

Treatment with hyper-immune plasma was strongly discouraged and boycotted by pharmaceutical companies and doctors financed by them, because it does not cost anything and renders the analogous therapy useless, which is made in laboratories with monoclonal cells at exorbitant costs.

International standards specify that an experimental drug cannot be authorized for available, and while the experimental, emergency use authorized (EUA) Pfizer shot is substituted for Comirnaty, the two products are clearly legally distinct and not the same

• A licensed vaccine is not shielded from liability until or unless it's added to the recommended childhood vaccination schedule by the CDC. So, if you were injured by Comirnaty, you could sue Pfizer. You cannot sue if injured by the EUA Pfizer shot (or any of the other EUA COVID injections)

• Even though several hundred claims have been filed with the Countermeasures Injury Compensation Program (CICP) for injuries resulting from the COVID shots — which is the only possible avenue to obtain damages — not a single claim has been paid out

• Natural immunity is much stronger than what you can achieve from the injection, which only provides antibodies against the SARS-CoV-2 spike protein and wanes within a few months. The shots may in fact permanently limit the kind of immune response you would make were you to later be exposed or infected with COVID

• Children's Health Defense has filed a lawsuit arguing you cannot have a vaccine that is both an emergency use product and a licensed product at the same time. That's against the law, but the government has done it anyway. Remarkably, the request for an injunction was initially thrown out, but the CHD has not given up and is still pursuing the case

(Mercola) – In this interview, Dr. Meryl Nass, an internist specializing in toxicology, vaccine-induced illnesses and Gulf War illness, shares her insights into the dangers of the COVID jab, which received an emergency use authorization October 26, 2021, for children as young as 5.

We also discuss the conflicts of interest within the U.S. Food and Drug Administration that seem to be behind this reckless decision, and how the agency pulled the wool over our eyes with its approval of Pfizer/BioNTech's Comirnaty COVID injection.

Is the COVID jab approved or not?

As explained by Nass:

"All of the COVID 'vaccines,' and most of the COVID treatment products, have not been [FDA] approved. Approved means licensed. All except one, which is the Pfizer vaccine for adults, age 16 and up, which got approved, i.e., licensed on August 23 [2021].

But every other vaccine, and for every other age group, including the boosters, have only been authorized under emergency use authorizations (EUAs). There's a critical difference [between licensing and EUA]. Once a drug is fully licensed, it is subject to liability.

If the company injures you with that product, you can sue them, unless it later gets put on the CDC's childhood schedule or is recommended by the CDC [U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention] [during] pregnancy, in which case it obtains a different liability shield.

It then becomes part of the National Vaccine Injury Compensation Program (NVICP, established under the 1986 National Childhood Vaccine Injury Act), and 75 cents from every dose of vaccine that is sold in the United States goes into a fund to pay for injuries that way."

The National Childhood Vaccine Injury Act removed liability for all vaccines recommended by the CDC for children. Since 2016, they've also removed liability for vaccines given to pregnant women, a category that has become the latest "gold rush" for vaccines. Naturally, once a company is no longer liable for injuries, the profitability of the product in question increases dramatically.

Countermeasures injury compensation program is nearly useless

Products under emergency use have their own special government program for liability called the Countermeasures Injury Compensation Program (CICP). "It is a terrible program," Nass says. CICP is an offshoot of the 2005 PREP Act.

"The PREP act enabled the CICP to be created by Congress," Nass explains. "Congress has to allocate money for it. If you are injured by an emergency use product, you don't get any legal process. The companies have had all their liability waived. There is a single process that is administered through HHS [Health and Human Services]."

"Some employees there decide whether you deserve to be compensated or not. The maximum in damages you can obtain is about $370,000 if you're totally disabled or die, and the money is only to compensate you for lost wages or unpaid medical bills."

So far, even though several hundred CICP claims have been filed for injuries resulting from the COVID shots, not a single claim has been paid out. This is important, because the statute of limitations is one year. "It's getting close to running out for people who were vaccinated early," Nass says.

If you fail to apply in time, you lose the opportunity to get any compensation entirely. "Of course, in fact, it's really 'an opportunity' to apply and get nothing because almost nobody gets paid," she says. At that point, you have no further recourse. There's no appeals process to the judicial system.

"You can ask the HHS twice to compensate you, and if they say no, that's it," Nass explains. "You can attempt to sue the company that made the product, if you're convinced it was improperly made, but the secretary of HHS has to give you the permission to sue."

"You have to prove that there was willful misconduct and no one has ever reached that bar. So, there has never been a lawsuit under this. Anyway, that's what you're looking at. If you get the vaccine under EUA and are injured, you're on your own. People have no idea about this when they vaccinate themselves or their children."

Why were the shots mandated?

As you know by now, President Biden decided to mandate the COVID jab for most federal employees (but not all) and private companies with 100 employees or more. "We don't know why that is," Nass says. It doesn't make sense, as large numbers of Americans have already recovered from COVID-19 and have durable, long-lasting immunity already.

As correctly noted by Nass, natural immunity is much stronger than what you can achieve from the injection, which only provides antibodies against the SARS-CoV-2 spike protein and wears off within a few months. The shots "may in fact permanently limit the Senior US Army doctor: 'I believe the COVID vaccine is a greater threat to soldiers' health than the virus itself'

Lt. Col. Theresa Long, a U.S. Army doctor, recounted a multitude of vaccine injury stories involving soldiers.

(LifeSiteNews) – A senior U.S. army doctor said that COVID vaccines are more dangerous to the health of American soldiers than COVID itself after she had ground "three out of three soldiers" in only one morning due to adverse reactions to the vaccine.

Lt. Col. Theresa Long is a senior U.S. army aerospace medicine specialist who testified at an expert panel on vaccine injuries organized by U.S. Sen. Ron Johnson of Wisconsin on November 2 in Washington, D.C.

Dr. Long has repeatedly warned against the risks of adverse events posed by the mRNA vaccines and in September filed an affidavit against the Biden administration's vaccine mandate for service members.

Long gave a 15-minute testimony about COVID vaccine adverse events experienced by soldiers and denounced the efforts of the U.S. army to conceal them.

"I believe the COVID vaccine is a greater threat to soldier's health and military readiness than the virus itself," she told the panel.

US soldiers used as 'lab rats' and asked to get the jab or leave – impact on combat readiness

Long began by denouncing the treatment of American soldiers who were pressured into taking the COVID vaccine or face being taken out of uniform.

She condemned the practice and explained that, in terms of combat readiness, taking soldiers out of uniform is equivalent to losing them on the battlefield.

"Over 200,000 U.S. members have rejected the vaccine, yet the military is pressing forward without regard to damage to the morale and [military] readiness. We have never lost 200,000 soldiers on the battlefield in a few months," she said.

"Taking soldiers out of uniforms has the same impact on readiness as losing them on the battlefield," she stressed.

In May, Long attended the U.S. Army's Senior Preventive Medicine Leadership Course, where she expressed her concerns to senior leaders about the rushed manner in which the vaccines were trialed and then imposed on U.S. soldiers.

"We skipped two years of phase two trials and three years of phase three trials, we only lost 12 active-duty soldiers to COVID, and yet we're going to risk the health of the entire fighting force on a vaccine we only had two months of safety data on?" she asked.

The response from the leadership was "you're damn right, Colonel, and you're going to get every soldier you can to take the vaccine so I can get enough data points to determine if the vaccine is safe."

Long was shocked that service members who give their life to their country were being used as guinea pigs.

"Our service members are national treasures," she said.

"They have stared down bullets, been blown up by IEDs and bombs, they have endured thankless and protracted wars, missing the birth of their children. They bore the burden no matter the cost. They did so without respect to political parties or narrative. These are warriors, not lab rats!" she added.

Long's first encounter with an adverse event and VAERS data

Long then recalled her first encounter with a vaccine adverse event, which took place right from the onset of the vaccine rollout, when one of her colleagues, desirous to protect her elderly parents from COVID, took the vaccine and soon experienced fever, acute pain, and a complete loss of motion in her arm for more than a week.

"That was the first time I looked in the vaccine adverse event reporting system to see if her symptoms were common," Long recalled.

"What I found horrified me," she said.

"I found that the VAERS, in only a few months into the vaccination campaign, already had more deaths than in any year for all vaccines combined in each of the 10 years previously."

Coercion of soldiers and violation of medical ethics

Long subsequently went to Fort Benning, a U.S. army base located at the border of Alabama and Georgia. There, she received testimonies from soldiers who told her how they had been pressured to take the vaccine.

"I encountered numerous soldiers who told me of threats, coercion and intimidation to get the vaccine that were at that time still under EUA (Emergency Use Authorization)," she recalled, and explained that "this violated medical ethics, specifically the Nuremberg code."

Long later inquired about adverse events and was shocked to learn that no monitoring of adverse events was occurring at the time.

When I emailed Army Public Health Command and asked about adverse events, the epidemiologist emailed me back and told me that they were not tracking, tracing or monitoring adverse events," she said.

A marketing campaign in violation of DoD regulations

The U.S. Army doctor then alluded to the marketing and propaganda-style campaign that took place to encourage military healthcare professionals to get vaccinated.

"I received an email encouraging military healthcare providers and professionals to get vaccinated: 'put a sticker on your uniform posted to social media with the hashtag 'the vaccine is safe,' or hashtag 'get vaccinated!'" she recalled.

"This disturbed me because it seemed as though health care professionals were being used as the marketing arm of pharmaceutical companies," she added, arguing that this type of marketing campaign is a violation of DoD regulations.

"Many would say this is just good public health messaging, but I would say this is a violation of DOD I that prohibits endorsement of a civilian product," she said.

She also pointed out that the main goal of pharmaceutical companies is to make a profit.

"Yes, these vaccines are a product! The pharmaceutical companies are not benevolent charities, they are there to make a profit, and they are," she said.

Women are exposed to unique risks

Long came across a second case of adverse reaction to the COVID vaccine in May, when she met a young woman who was training for ranger school.

"She was everything we wanted in a female warrior," Long recalled.

The young woman confided in Long that she was the only female in her class who was not vaccinated, as she was concerned about the effects that the vaccine might have on her fertility.

Long told the young woman that she had "everything to lose and nothing to gain" from the vaccine, after examining the potential risks and benefits for her age, physical condition, and fitness.

The young woman told Long about the harassment and intimidation soldiers were facing for not getting vaccinated. She eventually caved to the pressure and took the vaccine.

She later reached out to Long to tell her that she developed adverse events that forced her to drop the course.

"One of the things that this female's story highlighted the most for me was that women had unique considerations, [different] than men and postmenopausal women," Long said.

"Women were in their childbearing potential have all the eggs they'll ever have from conception until menopause. Their exposure to various chemicals, toxins, drugs and x-rays can not only affect their health, but that of their children and their ability to have children," she explained.

After doing some research, Long found that eight out of 10 drugs pulled off the market "disproportionately harmed females." She gave the example of DES (Diethylstilbestrol), which after 40 years became associated with infertility and cancers.

"And this was a drug that went through standard clinical trials," she said.

Myocarditis, informed consent and censorship

At the end of her testimony, Long discussed the case of three pilots she had to ground due to vaccine injuries. Two of them suffered from pericarditis and myocarditis, and the third showed symptoms similar to that of agricultural pilot Cody Flint, who also testified that day.

Long first denounced the fact that the vaccination campaign was not paused despite concerns raised about risks of myocarditis in young people.

"In June of 2021, the CDC announced that they were holding an emergency meeting to discuss higher than expected myocarditis in 16-to-24-year-olds. Despite this announcement, the military did not even pause their vaccination efforts. Why?" she asked.

She recalled that her appeals to give soldiers informed consent were ignored.

"I made numerous efforts to get senior medical leaders to, at the very least, inform soldiers of the risk. Leadership ignored my concerns," she said.

She described the experience as "troubling" and explained that "you can't have informed consent if you don't tell your patients of the risks and benefits of a treatment or procedure."

"In one morning I had to ground 3 out of 3 pilots due to vaccine injuries"

— Chief Nerd (@TheChiefNerd) November 2, 2021

Long was also a victim of censorship when she informed her command that she had grounded the three pilots who presented themselves to her with serious vaccine injuries.

"After I reported to my command, my concerns that in one morning, I had to ground three out of three pilots due to vaccine injuries, the next day my patients were cancelled, my charts were pulled for review and I was told that I would not be seeing acute patients anymore, just healthy pilots there for their flight physical," she recalled.

Long concluded her testimony by stressing the importance of the "loyal dissenter," that is, the person selected to be the dissenting opinion "in order to prevent groupthink."

"Patients are entitled to a second opinion on their medical care. What happens when bureaucrats mandate that there is no dissenting opinion?" she asked.

She then compared pharmaceutical companies with pilots unfit to fly, and the American people to their passengers.

"Medical errors kill the equivalent of three Boeing 747s packed full of patients every day. Medicine is not perfect. Doctors are not perfect. This vaccine is not perfect; and yet we are mandating every single American to get on board a single aircraft piloted by bureaucrats and administrators who are unfit to fly the aircraft," she said.

"They need to be grounded," she concluded.

Don't get vaccinated

kind of immune response you would make were you to be infected with COVID later," Nass says.

For these reasons, there's absolutely no good reason to vaccinate people who have recovered from the infection and several bad reasons. There's evidence showing the shot can be more harmful for those with existing immunity.

"But for reasons best known to itself, the Biden administration feels so certain it needs to vaccinate everybody that it has used illegal means to tell employers they will lose federal contracts if they don't force their employees to be vaccinated immediately, and must fire them — if they're health care workers, for example, or government employees, or military — if they have not been vaccinated.

Obviously that is creating a great deal of chaos, particularly within the health care industry, particularly in my state, Maine, where these draconian rules have gone into effect and many fire department, police, EMTs, nurses and doctors can no longer work.

The one thing that was necessary to push mandates forward was for the government to be able to say it had a licensed product. Before the emergency use authorization was created in 2005, you had licensed drugs and you had experimental drugs and nothing else.

There was no gray area between them. Any use of a medication or vaccine that is not fully licensed is still experimental, despite the fact that a new category of drugs has been created with emergency use authorizations.

These are still experimental drugs, so under emergency use, you can't force people [to take them]. You have to offer them options and they have the right to refuse. Since that is part of the statute, the federal government can't get around it.

Therefore, attorneys in the Biden administration knew they could not legally impose mandates under an EUA, and so they demanded that FDA provide a COVID vaccine full approval, aka, an unrestricted license. This was believed to enable them to impose mandates.

They must have put pressure on the FDA, and FDA gave them what they wanted, which

Exposing The Vaccine Practice Known As Hek 293

By John O'Sullivan

Practices known as HEK 293 are the experiments needed to obtain a working cell line from a human embryonic kidney for vaccine development.

To assist understanding below is an extract from the January 2021 article by A.M. Cardinalli in the Crisis Magazine which explains what it is and why it is relevant to the requests being made.

Although it may be true that Pfizer and Moderna vaccines do not use any cells derived from abortion in the production process. I.e. no directly injected foetal cells or their engineered descendants are employed (though this fact differs with other manufacturers) the full information is missing.

It is claimed that the abortion-derived cell lines were only used in testing, but it still means that these so-called vaccines depend on the involvement of abortion. Current information is that the cell line used in testing came from one abortion, which took place decades ago.

However, as this extract reveals…

Extract:

' The most prominent cell line, called HEK 293, comes from an abortion performed in the 1970's. It's labelled 293 because that's how many experimental attempts the researchers needed to get a working cell line. Therefore, though the abortion-to-experiment ratio is not precisely one-to-one, hundreds of abortions went into the project, even if they didn't result in the working line.

HEK stands for human embryonic kidney. To harvest a viable embryonic kidney for this purpose, sufficiently healthy children old enough to have adequately-developed kidneys must be removed from the womb, alive, typically by caesarean section, and have their kidneys cut out. This must take place without anaesthesia for the child, which would lessen the viability of the organs.

Instead of being held, rocked, and comforted in the time intervening between their birth and their death, they have organs cut out of them alive. There is no way that a spontaneous abortion could result in the cell line (as the kidneys cannot remain viable past the brief window in which they must be harvested) or that some brilliant researcher found a way for great good to come out of a rare tragedy by making use of a child's body donated to science after it was aborted.

The deliberate killing of an unwanted child (a little girl, in the case of HEK 293) took place in the tortuous manner it did precisely to obtain her organs for research. The harvest of her organs was the direct cause of her death, prior to which, she was a living child, outside the womb.'

Because of ethical and religious concerns, citizens may wish to write to their elected officials who are promoting these 'vaccines' and demand they answer the following:

Can you prove that none of the inoculations currently being offered have had any involvement with the HEK 293 practices?

If your elected official cannot offer such proof, ask them:

What measures will be taken to provide exemption certificates for those citizens rejecting all inoculations/vaccines produced with HEK 293 involvement – on moral and/or religious grounds?

An excellent document written by Pat Swords BE CEng PPSE FIChemE CEnv MIEMA titled 'Risk Assessment – Travel and Similar Restrictions related to COVID-19' has a very useful extract (see below) which is relevant and warrants addressing by all politicians and vax promoters.

Extract: (my emphasis)

4.8 Vaccination 'Directive 2000/54/EC on biological agents in the workplace, in its Article 14 on 'Health surveillance', states, "When necessary, effective vaccines should be made available for those workers who are not already immune".

Although an obligation rests on employers in such circumstances to "take account of the recommended code of practice set out in Annex VII". This in turn requires that "Workers should be informed of the benefits and drawbacks of both vaccination and non-vaccination".

Section 4.3 has already highlighted the 'scientific method' and its role in drug testing. Despite the pharmaceutical industry employing the best scientific resources, only 20 to 25 new drugs obtain regulatory approval each year and some 70% fail the final Phase III clinical trials.

With conventional drugs, the compound is present in the body for a limited period before natural break down and excretion. The therapeutic effect, and the success thereof or lack of success, are evident over this short period.

Vaccines are inherently different, instead the body's immune system is stimulated, such that at some time in the future, when it is exposed to the relevant pathogen, a heightened immune response results, which prevents the disease from developing.

In 1798, Edward Jenner (image, above) appeared to discover that cowpox provided immunity to the far deadlier smallpox and hence the principle of vaccination was discovered. However, scientific understanding of the immune system is still at an early stage and while successful vaccines have emerged by 'trial and error', there are still considerable unknowns. Not least as unlike conventional drug testing, the impacts, whether beneficial or not, occur over much longer timeframes.

Worst yet, during the current 'pandemic' an increasing number of scientists and researchers (as illustrated here) have been questioning the very concept of Germ Theory, itself, suspecting that virology made be founded on error and group think.

In November 2020, a 15-year-old boy won a major financial settlement in the Irish High Court based on having developed narcolepsy (sleeping sickness), following the administration of the Pandemrix swine flu vaccine in 2009. Approximately 80 further cases are outstanding in the Irish courts.

Narcolepsy is a disorder of the immune system and the retrospective analysis of the introduction on the Pandemrix vaccine showed that insufficient knowledge existed of the immune system.

It is not a perfect world, but what is of considerable concern is that many in the medical profession do not seem to have learnt from this episode. In 2009, the Department of Health's chief medical officer Dr Tony Holohan said that Pandemrix had "a very good safety profile". He added that it was very important young people in at risk groups are vaccinated as quickly as possible. "We have no hesitation in recommending it".

Jumping forward to 2021, we find the chief executive of the Health Services Executive (HSE) Paul Reid saying it was "inexcusable" for any healthcare worker, who works with patients, not to take the vaccine. Reacting to an general practitioner, who said he would not administer the vaccine to his patients, Mr Reid said it was "quite shocking" that a doctor would take such a course of action.

The Irish doctor in question, Dr Waters, confirmed he would not administer the vaccine on the basis he believed it untrustworthy and unnecessary. "My problem primarily is that I don't think the pathogenicity of Covid is sufficiently severe."

42 https://www.irishtimes.com/news/authorities-insist-on-safety-ofvaccine-1.847977 28 cause lock downs or b) to use a messenger RNA [vaccine]."

43 This is an entirely understandable position, influenza strikes the old and infirm badly, but those younger and fitter suffer limited, if any, impacts and COVID as an influenza variant is no different. As it turned out, the swine flu in 2009, as an influenza, had very limited impact. However, in Sweden where the authorities also promoted Pandemrix, 60% responded by being vaccinated and the Swedish Pharmaceutical Insurance has so far approved 440 of 702 narcolepsy claims, paying out a total of €9.8 million.

44 Just like Pandemrix,45 the current COVID-19 vaccines had a rushed development with emergency authorisation and Government indemnities. Hence, the pharmaceutical companies have immunity from legal claims.

The principal COVID-19 vaccine in use, produced by Pfizer / Moderna, comprises of new mRNA gene editing technology. Like it or not, a giant experiment is ongoing, the outcome which will only emerge in time, as science develops a greater understanding of the body's autoimmune responses, among which is narcolepsy. Indeed, many who died of COVID-19 did so from a 'cytokine storm', in simple terms, overreaction by the body's own immune system.

As Section 1 pointed out, risk is related to reward, so why take a risk with such a vaccine, if one is in an age group where the impacts of COVID-19 are very limited. This risk reward profile may be different in older age groups, particularly those of 70+. However, with old age, the body's immune system weakens, vaccinations are less effective and it takes longer to recover from illness. As influenza rapidly mutates, the previous development of flu vaccines was primarily an educated guess of the likely strain to be present the following winter. The success of this was at best 50%.

People die of old age; for which there are multiple reasons. As to vaccines somehow being the elixir, which will prevent this, the evidence to date is limited.'

At Principia Scientific International (PSI) we are generally of the view that we will NOT accept these 'vaccines' because:

(a) no gold standard isolate of the virus has been shown by any government (see here)

(b) the PCR test for the virus is unfit for purpose (see here)

(c) the 'vaccines' are not approved as such, and are merely licensed for emergency use only (see here)

(d) the 'vaccines' are acknowledged not to be very effective (see here)

(e) the drug companies are not legally liable for adverse events (see here)

(f) cheap, alternative treatments are readily available (see here)

At PSI we are natural skeptics of media, government and corporate claims. We recommend trusting no one and doing your own research to become better informed and make your own risk assessments.

As the trusty old saying goes: prevention is always better than cure. Build your natural immunity by following a good diet, regular exercise and consider taking supplements such as vitamins, CBD, etc.

he chose not to get the COVID shots.

The media misrepresented his decisions, Isaac said, including falsely claiming that he chose not to get jabbed because he listened to President Donald Trump.

He said that some players, even some who have gotten jabbed, supported his personal decision, privately or publicly.

Isaac then talked about how his fellow NBA player Kyrie Irving of the Brooklyn Nets cannot play any home games because of New York City's vaccine passport system. Rubin mentioned that Isaac is fortunate to play for a Florida team – the state does not have any vaccine passports.

"Absolutely a blessing I'm glad to be in Florida with everything that we have going on and yeah it's unfortunate for the Kyrie situation," Isaac said. "You know I just feel like he … gets a great deal of respect for me for the courage that it takes to not only say 'no' but to forgo money and everything that he's doing."

"He really does care about the people who are losing jobs and feeling like they don't have a place to turn in this whole matter," the Magic player said.

Isaac said he grew up in a Christian household and is thankful for Christ's "unconditional love."

Rubin asked Isaac about his philosophical views, noting that the NBA player had first asked him about psychologist and gender theory critic Jordan Peterson.

"He doesn't strike me as a white supremacist," Isaac said to laughs from the crowd. He said he "dove" into Peterson's lectures and listened to Rubin and other speakers at the event's views.

Isaac reiterated his support for natural immunity and "common sense" when it comes to vaccine. He said conservatives should focus their messaging on families and everyday people.

"The way that conservatism has been branded by people and being able to reach people that just care about working and providing for those families and being able to reach them in a real way with their ideas and being able to lay out how this thing is going to work to move the country in a better position," Isaac said.

He concluded by saying he wants to be able to use his platform as an NBA player to help others use their faith to stand up for their beliefs.

"How can I provide the tools that have been afforded to me through Christ," Isaac said he asked him, "and through just how I've thought and packaged it in a way and so this is not to just the plug but I am working on a book right now and it's called it's called 'Why Stand.'"

"It takes the journey of my life and you know being a young kid and experiencing racism at a young age and being somebody that at a time would not be on this stage or stand up for what he believed in but finding my courage finding my strength and confidence in Christ to then step out and be the only one to do something and so kind of packaging that in a way to give people the tools and the confidence and the courage to step out and stand for what they believe in," he concluded.

verses and expand on their meaning and relevance during our trying times.

One of the questions Solomon pondered was "why shouldn't we be surprised when we observe the oppression of the poor and the violent perverting of justice in a place?" Solomon answers much of his own rhetoric with the simple phrase "This is vanity and vexation of spirit", which points to self-admiration and a perpetual state of affliction. The recent rioting and destruction that occurred before the last election was carefully coordinated and intentionally planned. Justice was perverted violently in many places. BLM and Antifa were complicit, and people were injured and killed.

The prophet Isaiah also warned "Woe unto them that call evil good, and good evil; that put darkness for light, and light for darkness; that put bitter for sweet, and sweet for bitter!". We all should be able to relate to these words living through the past two years, especially when we realize our media is no longer trusted in addition to health organizations we rely on for personal safety.

Consider all the recent evil acts that are being done across the world by the likes of few individuals (Biden, Fauci, Gates, Schwab, etc.). For those of you in a trance that are unable to overcome the sleep potion, deep slumber and addiction from mainstream media (MSM) and Big Tech's false narratives and censorship of truth, we will patiently wait for you to awaken to the reality and severity of the impending destruction of our country and world if we continue down this path. Make no mistake, what's going on is intentional with an evil backdrop of widespread greed.

It is apparent to me that MSM and Big Tech have tried to suppress our freedom of speech. If anyone should question their (false) narratives with alternative opinions, we are denounced as spreading misinformation (doublespeak misinfo), and people are canceled and/or censored.

Just look at the backlash from Aaron Rogers and his personal opinions regarding individual human health rights with respect to shots. We have all become subject to their propaganda, deceit, and lies, and now although people congregate at athletic games, restaurants and night clubs, the NFL and other organizations continues the charade of forced COVID tests, mask wearing and isolation as if it has any merit? Our current science is one without regard for facts, and political arguments (from MSM and Big Tech) are without substance. The charade must end.

Let us turn to the Bible and history for some direction and hope. Ecclesiastes laid out some moral thoughts on human behavior and ideals. Some of the lines appear to be correlated with the current issues our nation is facing such as election fraud, the COVID pandemic, climate change hoax, border security and the great reset. Please consider the following passages (italics) from Chapters 10 and 5:

There is a sore evil which I have seen under the sun, as an error which proceedeth from the ruler. It all started with a manmade pandemic that was released just before the election in 2020. The election in turn was full of fraud and corruption in key battleground states, whose illegal victories now spread outward with leftist ideologist leaders that plan on paying back cronies with tax money targeted to special interest groups, people and programs. Our democracy and freedoms were stolen, and now we are forced to listen and have executive orders forced upon us by a ruler (Biden) that has obvious cognitive impairment and is not fit for office as leader of the free world.

When thou vowest a vow unto God, defer not to pay it; for he hath no pleasure in fools: pay that which thou hast vowed. The new multi-trillion-dollar tax plan (Build Back Better) created by the architects Biden, Pelosi, Schumer et al as well as the United Nations will put our children and grandchildren on the hook for an entire generation enslaved to taxes. All of our elected leaders have taken a vow, and if they think that the populace isn't paying attention, God surely is aware of their actions and oath to serve.

He that loveth silver shall not be satisfied with silver; nor he that loveth abundance with increase: this is also vanity. Most recently, Joe and Hunter Biden as well former presidents, vice presidents, and life politicians like Obama, Bush's, Clintons, Kerry, Gore etc. have compromised their oath of servitude and integrity to love of money and power. They are all caught in a trap, and their ultimate judgement may soon be here on earth, or certainly later by God.

When goods increase, they are increased that eat them: and what good is there to the owners thereof, saving the beholding of them with their eyes? Technocrats like Bill Gates along with communist China not only own a significant amount of US farmland, but they have plans to drastically alter our food supply and energy production. Gates, Fauci et al have other plans which will have a drastic influence on worldwide human health via the current vaccinations (aka Shots), the COVID endemic turned pandemic, vaccine passports, and promotion of socialism and communism on a world-wide platform with the aid of the UN and WEF's Klaus Schwab.

There is a sore evil which I have seen under the sun, namely, riches kept for the owners thereof to their hurt. But those riches perish by evil travail. The wealthy of wealthiest of families dating back to World War II want to control the world (Rockefeller's, Rothchild's, Dupont's, Bush's, Morgan's, etc.) through all their descendants by their influence and control of the central banks, business and investment firms (Vanguard, Blackrock, State Street and affiliated institutional investors, executive shareholders, subsidiaries, acquisitions) along with non-governmental organizations (NGOs). These people and entities comprise the Deep State and have brazenly announced details of their plan "The Great Reset" (TGR) through means of well-choreographed actions including COVID, Agenda 21 & 2030, the Green New Deal, Build Back Better, and Population Reduction. Their scheme involves bribes, blackmail, cronyism and corruption to the highest degree.

The last biblical reference comes from the New Testament, Matthew Chapter 18:4-18, where Jesus points out that we must become like innocent children to enter the kingdom of heaven. He then warns those who are wicked to children that it would be better for them that "…a millstone were hanged about his neck, and that he were drowned in the depth of the sea". He then provides a follow up warning to the world for its wickedness, and then points out that "…woe unto that man by whom the offences cometh!", insinuating that the ultimate guilt falls on the individual, no matter who or what has influenced their bad decisions.

For these last references, it is easy to see how those words can be directed at individuals who are set to gain significant money and power from injecting shots into children. Those children, by the way, have the best natural immunity against COVID compared to all age groups. These wicked people include the likes of Anthony Fauci, Bill Gates, Ralph Baric, Stephane Bancel, Shi Zhengli, Alain Merieux, Neil Ferguson and Peter Daszak. Organizations these people are associated with include EcoHealth Alliance, Big Pharma (such as Moderna, Pfizer, Johnson & Johnson, etc.), Communist China, WIV, along with WHO, CDC, NIH, FDA, OSHA and FBI. Do all these individuals and organizations think that We the People are not paying attention? I'm fairly certain that God is, and so are others in large numbers across the world. The Great Awakening has begun!

Remember, 1) the COVID pandemic was intentionally created by humans, apparently through GOF research, 2) it was intentionally spread by China throughout the world, 3) it would not have been called a pandemic except for a group of scientists who incorrectly estimated US human mortalities of over 2 million, 3) the COVID testing results have been completely over-estimated from the beginning by flawed tests (false positives) by manipulating PCR values as well as inflated cause of death statistics, 4) the resulting pandemic hoax allowed our 2020 election integrity to be compromised for the Democratic party, 5) the pandemic hoax has literally killed hundreds of thousands of people by not providing simple treatment options used by other countries like China and by the inconsistent health & safety monologues and inept leadership of Fauci et al, and 6) it completely destroyed and created affliction to people and economies across the US and world, while international inside traders (aka the Deep State including big pharma) profited from all this turmoil.

These shots still remain under emergency authorization use and do not qualify as a "vaccine". There has been no mention or consideration of people with natural immunity from the inception of the pandemic hoax. Also recall that many therapeutic treatments and supplements are available that are effective at dealing with this exasperated cold and flu endemic, but Big Pharma and the Deep State do not want them used or approved. This is because of their role in TGR for their own monetary and control purposes. That is, unless they have a cut in the action, like some big pharma companies trying to patent their own version of ivermectin even though they have a considerable conflict of interest with government agencies. Now more than ever each individual's personal health is more important than any other issue, and like Mr. Rogers clearly articulated, each human should have complete control of their own body. The goalposts continue to move and will once again in the near future as they continue to manipulate the COVID testing data tracking statistics which they will try to use to keep this pandemic hoax going for the next decade.

Besides our national and international healthcare leaders, we should also not overlook those complicit with the daily oversight of our children such as teachers, school administrators, and school board members who choose to force corrupt ideas upon our children such as 1619, Woke Culture, Critical Race Theory, etc. These groups of individuals all have one thing in common: they believe more in money, their pensions and their own personal interests than serving children and parents in an altruistic manner. Children's minds can be mended, but those who support vaccine mandates for children, such as big pharma, schools and the medical establishment, without their knowledge of short or long-term health effects or approval by parents will receive judgement and the appropriate sentence by God.

You see, the people who wrote the latter parts of the Old Testament in Solomon's days were forewarning us of the evil that had entered their cities, towns and villages. They were uncovering the lies and hypocrisy of those corrupt individuals and groups who controlled the world at the time. They forewarned of their inevitable downfall and destruction, and they provided hope to those steadfast individuals and groups who believed in the Sovereignty and Power of God. Many

Strength in numbers: Woke, pro-LGBT leftists are being met head on

There are people all over the world that have not bowed down to the gods of the Left and when we band together, we can make a difference.

By John-Henry Westen

(LifeSiteNews) – In a world where feelings matter more than facts and those proclaiming the truth are labeled as conspiracy theorists, nothing surprises us or jars us anymore.

We're constantly bombarded by so much news with each event crazier by the day leaving us numb and indifferent. And yet we must sit up and take notice because when we speak up, when we act, when we band together, the Orwellian forces that believe they can get away with anything and everything will realize that they can't.

The abortion-pushing Biden administration has announced another promotion for "transgender" Assistant Health & Human Services (HHS) Secretary Richard "Rachel" Levine, who was sworn in Tuesday as a four-star admiral of the U.S. Public Health Service Commissioned Corps (PHSCC), for which some in the press are describing him as the "first female" to reach such a high-ranking position, ignoring the fact that he is a biological male.

So let's get this straight. Under the regime of woke politics men can't speak about abortion because they're not women and they have no uteruses, but at the same time men can become women just like that and also steal women's awards in sports and break the glass ceiling for women by claiming to be women.

Oh and by the way, not only is Levine not the "first female" to reach this position, his official government biography lists no prior military service.

This ridiculous glorification of gender dysphoric men has grave consequences.

A pro-LGBTQ school board member of the Loudoun County Public School in Virginia has resigned from her position over controversy about the cover-up of an alleged rape by a skirt-wearing male student in a female washroom. The parent of the girl who had been a victim of the bathroom rape attempted to alert attendees to the board meeting and was arrested and cited as an example of a 'domestic terrorist' by National School Board Association.

According to court documents, the 15-year-old trans-identifying make has entered the girls' bathroom wearing a skirt. He has been accused of sexual assault in two different schools and between these two attacks, the Loudoun County School Board enacted a policy allowing students to access sex-specific private spaces, including bathrooms, and to play on sports teams based on their "gender identity."

Chief Judge Pamela Brooks of the Virginia Juvenile and Domestic Relations District Court ruled that there was sufficient evidence to find the "gender-fluid" student guilty of two counts of "forcible sodomy" in the Stone Bridge High School case. And since the adults are much to woke to do much about this, and want to bend their minds to the trans dogma so much, students themselves took to protesting the insanity.

Hundreds of high school students across Loudoun County, Virginia, walked out of class in protest and slammed school officials for mishandling this assault case.

It is never about compassion and tolerance and acceptance and women's rights. It never was and never will be.

This horrifying story is proof of the fact that the woke LGBTQ movement bent on erasing gender and sexuality are against women and have no qualms with letting women and children suffer sexual assault as long as their agenda is established.

They are ready to go to any lengths to protect their woke religion even if it means sacrificing women and children. And this shouldn't surprise us.

The ancient pagans sacrificed their children to Baal and Moloch and in today's world we sacrifice babies in the wombs of their mothers to the gods of money and convenience through Planned Parenthood and this very same lobby that turns a blind eye to this war on women and children.

This religion of the woke, abortion-loving LGBTQ lobby is eerily similar to that of the Satanic temple that lists abortion as their sacred ritual and vows to fight to the death for LGBTQ rights.

C.S. Lewis says, "All sin, whatever else it is, is sacrilege." We read in the Scripture, "In the day that God created man, he made him to the likeness of God. He created them male and female; and blessed them."

The war against male and female just like the war against the babies in the womb is diabolic and it makes perfect sense for the occult to be part of this agenda.

And they want to spread this false religion also to children. A recent Twix candy commercial promotes transgenderism to children complete with the message that children who think that a boy dressed like a girl is "weird" will be subject to banishment, silencing, and possibly death. Watch my video above to catch this clip.

Walt Heyer, a man who underwent surgery to make himself appear like a woman and lived for eight years as "Laura" only to later experience regret and detransition, says, "The message delivered by the Twix commercial is psychologically and emotionally destructive."

But in addition, Heyer sees another agenda at play giving witchcraft a positive spin with an anti-God message. "What Twix and the creative team behind the ad are revealing is, if you read between the lines, that transgenderism is witchcraft. This is indoctrination [aimed at] separating children from God. This is how you divide children from God and bring them into the LGBT world, which is a form of witchcraft ideology. The nanny-witch in the commercial is saying, 'Come with me, you don't need God.'"

It's not just chocolate-bar companies and other corporations that are pushing the LGBTQ dogma. Last week, Congress passed Joe Biden's $1.2 trillion infrastructure package, the Infrastructure Investment and Jobs Act (IIJA) or Bipartisan Infrastructure Framework (BIF), sending the pro-LGBT spending bill to Biden's desk with key support from Republican lawmakers.

One section of the bill declares "gender identity" and "sexual orientation" federally-protected classes, like race or disability.

The Religious Freedom Institute points out the danger of the provision noting it "would severely undermine religious freedom in America, and tacitly affirm the pernicious, false message that the sexual morality historically taught by Judaism, Christianity, and Islam is bigoted and akin to racism."

LGBT influence in conservative and GOP circles is growing. Here's why that's deeply problematic

Conservative elites, whether members of the political, academic, media, or corporate classes, need to once again relentlessly pursue intellectual honesty and integrity regarding creeping LGBT influence within their ranks.

(LifeSiteNews) — On Saturday, major LGBT events on the Atlantic and Pacific coasts served to highlight the substantial rise of the normalization of homosexuality and transgenderism in institutions that were once regarded as bastions of conservatism.

Donald Trump hosted a huge black tie gala for Log Cabin (LGBT) Republicans at his Florida Mar-a-Lago Atlantic resort home where former First Lady Melania Trump was honored with the organization's "Spirit of Lincoln" Award.

Earlier that day at a San Diego shipyard, the U.S. Navy launched its newest ship, named after homosexual pederast Harvey Milk. The Secretary of the Navy and assorted admirals watched as a middle-aged transgender Navy veteran — a man who presents himself as a woman — christened the vessel. Two weeks earlier another gender-confused male was made a 4-star admiral.

Last weekend also capped a month of important national conservative gatherings where men "married" or "engaged" to or otherwise sexually and romantically partnered with other men were featured speakers.

During the previous week, billionaire Paypal founder Peter Thiel, talk show host Dave Rubin, and author Douglas Murray shared the stage with conservative Catholic luminaries Sohrab Ahmari, Mary Eberstadt, Michael Knowles, Patrick Deneen, Jay Richards, Rusty Reno, Robert Royal, and Austin Ruse at the National Conservatism Conference in Orlando. Leading conservative Christian U.S. Senators Ted Cruz (R-TX), Josh Hawley (R-MO), and Marco Rubio (R-FL) also shared that stage.

Conservative hero and current Ohio U.S. Senate candidate J.D. Vance, author of Hillbilly Elegy, announced last week that "married" homosexual Peter Thiel is playing an active role in his campaign.

Earlier in October, conservative podcast host and The Daily Wire writer Spencer Klavan was featured at a summit focused on the importance of classical learning for high school students alongside Princeton Professor Robert George, University of Dallas Professor Jessica Hooten Wilson, and other legendary conservative Catholic educators. Klavan is "engaged" to a man who also works for The Daily Wire.

Then on Monday, the founding of a new institution of higher learning, The University of Austin, whose core purpose is "the intrepid pursuit of truth" aimed at "human flourishing," was publicized to much fanfare. While the school will boast a stellar conservative and Christian faculty, it also counts two famous gay commentators — high profile males "married" to males — among its ranks: Andrew Sullivan and Jonathan Rauch. Both played huge roles in the promotion of same-sex "marriage" in the years leading up to the Supreme Court's Obergefell decision.

This raises the question: How will The University of Austin teachers and influencers inspire "the intrepid pursuit of truth" when the very public personal lives of its charter staff display a defiant, outright rejection of the most basic of observable, immutable truths: complementarity?

And how will "human flourishing" be promoted when LGBT influence has only served to disassemble the nuclear family, robbing children of life with both a loving mother and father?

What's going on?

All of these recent landmark events, whether wittingly or unwittingly, give the appearance of approval of homosexuality and same-sex marriage within conservative, Catholic, and Christian circles.

At the Mar-a-Lago event, Republican National Committee (RNC) Chairwoman Ronna McDaniel announced: "The RNC is launching our first-ever RNC Pride Coalition."

distribution except in the absence of an effective alternative treatment: this is why drug agencies in the USA and Europe have prevented the use of hydroxychloroquine, ivermectin, hyper-immune plasma, and other therapies with proven effectiveness. There is no need to remind you that all of these agencies, along with the WHO, are financed almost entirely by the pharmaceutical companies and by foundations tied to them, and that there is a very grave conflict of interest at the highest levels,[5] about which the media are culpably silent.[6] In expressing a moral evaluation of the vaccines, the Church cannot fail to take these elements into consideration, since they cause a manipulation of scientific information, on the basis of which the judgments about their moral liceity by ecclesiastical Authority have been formulated.

3.The experimental drugs are not vaccines in the proper sense

The Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith, while not expressing its opinion on the effectiveness and safety of the so-called vaccines, nevertheless defines them as "vaccines," taking for granted that they actually give immunity and protect people from active and passive contagion. This element is disavowed by the declarations coming from all of the world's health authorities and from the WHO, according to which vaccinated people can become infected and infect others more seriously than those who are not vaccinated[7] and find that their immune defenses are drastically reduced if not even completely destroyed.

A recent study confirms that the gene serum can cause forms of acquired immuno-deficiency in those who receive it.[8] Therefore, the drugs that are called "vaccines" do not fall within the official definition of a vaccine to which the CDF's Note presumably refers. In fact a "vaccine" is defined as a medicinal preparation aimed at inducing the production of protective antibodies by the organism, conferring specific resistance against a specific infectious disease (viral, bacterial, protozoal). This definition was recently changed by the WHO, because otherwise it would not have been able to include anti-Covid drugs, which do not induce the production of protective antibodies and do not confer a specific resistance against the SarsCoV-2 infectious disease.

Furthermore, while mRNA serums are dangerous because of the implications they have at the genetic level, the AstraZeneca serum may be even more harmful, as recent studies show.[9]

4.Proportionality between the costs and benefits of the vaccines

Limiting itself to an evaluation only of the morality of the use of the vaccines, the Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith does not take into account the proportionality between the presumed benefits of the gene serum and the short-term and long-term adverse side effects.

Worldwide, the number of deaths and grave pathologies following vaccination is increasing exponentially:[10] in only nine months these vaccines have caused more deaths than all vaccines in the last thirty years.[11] Not only this: in many nations – such as Israel for example[12] – the number of deaths after vaccination is now greater than the number of deaths from Covid.[13]

stopped the vax rollout and went to Ivermectin.

Period. Hard stop.

Hal Turner Editorial Opinion

If your government really wanted to end COVID, if that was its true goal, it would do what Japan did.

You can use Japan as a case study any time someone starts yammering some crap about how the vax is about helping you help yourself from getting others sick with what they've been vaxed against.

You use it as a case study when they try to make some lame argument about how the government is really really really trying its best to end COVID and it is the MAGA crowd that is causing the variants and keeping the virus around.

Japan stopped vaxing. Japan went to IVM. Japan is COVID-free. It did it in less than a month!

So if your government won't do what Japan did, now that JAPAN HAS BEAT COVID, what does it say about your government?

It says the conspiracy theorists were right! They were right. It is a damning conviction of the narrative that the government is somehow a benevolent force against you getting viruses.

No, because we now have historic precedent of a government doing the right thing and getting the WIN.

If your government won't do it, it is because the vax is about something other than the public good.

Hmmmm. What could it be about? How about totalitarian control!

Japan got started vaxing later, and quit earlier than Massachusetts. Massachusetts is still fighting COVID with a couple thousand breakthrough cases per week. Japan is done.

Steve,

Our county administrator and forester brought up a "service" that requires a 40+ year contract that reminded of the time when there was a push to give CA our carbon credits so they could pollute and we could pay by accepting control our forests. This time they want to sell the control of our forests to big polluting companies. Please send me anything that I can use against this. I voted against even checking into this and told them I'm not in favor anything driven by greed. They even have to agree to a non disclosure agreement. Uberliberal Bayfield county has already signed on to this. If you want any more info please call me. 715 474 3434

No record of unvaccinated person who recovered from Covid spreading the virus, CDC admits

By WorldTribune Staff, Nov. 12, 2021

The CDC has admitted that it has no record of an unvaccinated individual who has recovered from Covid ever spreading the virus after being reinfected.

The CDC made the admission after a New York attorney filed a Freedom of Information Act (FOIA) request in September asking for:

"Documents reflecting any documented case of an individual who (1) never received a Covid-19 vaccine; (2) was infected with Covid-19 once, recovered, and then later became infected again; and (3) transmitted SARS CoV-2 to another person when reinfected."

The CDC responded:

"A search of our records failed to reveal any documents pertaining to your request. The CDC Emergency Operation Center (EOC) conveyed that this information is not collected."

A study examining T cell responses in Covid-19 convalescent individuals published earlier this year revealed natural immunity provides better protection against the virus than vaccination.

"Natural immunity doesn't make Big Pharma any money which is why the Biden Regime and the CDC never talk about it," Gateway Pundit's Cristina Laila noted.

Aaron Rodgers gives the rest of the story: His side

Analysis by WorldTribune Staff, November 10, 2021

As the woke mob comes for what remains of his reputation, Green Bay Packers quarterback Aaron Rodgers said he isn't some "anti-vaxx flat earther" as leftists in politics, media, and the sports world are contending, but a "critical thinker" who believes in "bodily autonomy."

"I realize I'm in the crosshairs of the woke mob right now, so before my final nail gets put in my cancel culture casket, I think I'd like to set the record straight on so many of the blatant lies that are out there about myself right now," Rodgers said on "The Pat McAfee Show."

Rodgers tested positive for Covid last Wednesday, forcing him to miss the Packers' game Sunday against the Kansas City Chiefs, which the Chiefs won, 13-7.

Asked in August if he had been vaccinated, Rodgers said that he had been "immunized."

The woke mob has a narrative to stick to and does not stray from that narrative. So, the mob insisted that Rodgers had verified his status as vaccinated, which he didn't. Assorted loons quickly called out Rodgers as being dishonest. Terry Bradshaw said the Packers QB had "lied to everyone" about his vaccination status.

Rodgers said on the "Pat McAfee Show": "First of all, I didn't lie in the initial press conference. During that time, it was a witch hunt that was going on across the league where everybody in the media was so concerned about who was vaccinated and who wasn't and what that meant … And at the time, my plan was to say that I had been immunized. It wasn't some sort of ruse or lie. It was the truth."

"Not to have to acquiesce to some woke culture or crazed group of individuals who say you have to do something," Rodgers said. "Health is not a one-size-fits-all for everybody."

Rodgers said that he learned that he has an allergy to an ingredient in the mRNA vaccines and that he was not comfortable taking the Johnson & Johnson jab due to reports of adverse reactions.

Rodgers added that he does not believe that he should have to wear a mask in a room of fully vaccinated individuals.

"Some of the rules, to me, are not based in science at all. They're based purely in trying to out and shame people, like needing to wear a mask at a podium when every person in the room is vaccinated and wearing a mask – makes no sense to me," Rodgers said. "If you got vaccinated to protect yourself from a virus that I don't have as an unvaccinated individual, then why are you worried about anything I could give you?"

"I have followed every single protocol to a T – minus that one I just mentioned which makes absolutely no sense to me."

Candace Owens says Kanye West is right: Abortion is 'genocide' against blacks

The black conservative commentator agreed that the number of black babies lost to abortion amounts to 'genocide,' and said West 'is right to continue to beat the drum and to draw attention to this issue.'

(LifeSiteNews) – Conservative commentator and author Candace Owens spoke out Friday in support of rapper and pro-life Christian convert Kanye West, agreeing with West that extremely high rates of abortion in the U.S. black community are equivalent to an ongoing and deliberate "genocide" against black Americans.

Appearing on the podcast Drink Champs on November 4, pop culture icon and third-party 2020 presidential contender Kanye West told rapper Noreaga and DJ "EFN" that abortion contributes to racial "genocide," arguing that Planned Parenthood founder Margaret Sanger, a public supporter of eugenics, intended abortion to be a form of "black population control."

Responding to West's comments, Candace Owens, author of Blackout and host of the eponymous Daily Wire talk show Candace, told Fox News, "You know, I've spoken to Kanye about this at length in person, and this is something that he is very strong on and he is actually very correct on."

"You see so often the left and the liberals talking about Black Lives Matter, but when you mention abortion to them, they suddenly get very shy and very quiet," said Owens, who founded the Blexit Foundation with conservative speaker and former police officer Brandon Tatum to encourage black Americans to shake off their generational attachment to the pro-abortion Democrat party.

Owens said Democrats who support left-wing racial politics "don't want to discuss" abortion "because the statistics are staggering."

"That's some real data that we can actually take a look at. It is true that the black population would be double what it is today if it wasn't for abortion," Owens said.

Pro-life advocacy group Live Action stated that "Abortion disproportionately affects Black and minority women," noting that in 2016 "Black abortions (236,919 estimated) outnumbered the top nine leading causes of death (235,139) for Black Americans combined" that year.

A Live Action analysis of CDC data from 2016 found that approximately 649 black babies were killed through abortion every day that year.

"Estimated Black abortion numbers were 24 times greater than homicides committed on Black Americans (236,919 v. 9,860) that same year," the analysis stated.

The CDC's most recently released data indicates that some 117,626 black babies were the victims of surgical abortion in 2018, accounting for 33.6% of all abortions that year in spite of the fact that black women comprise only about 13% of the U.S. female population.

The CDC reported that black women hold the highest abortion rate in the nation (21.2 abortions per 1,000 women) and ratio (335 abortions per 1,000 live births), compared with a rate among white women of 6.3 abortions per 1,000 women and 110 abortions per 1,000 live births.

According to the data, the number of black babies killed through abortion is equal to a third of the number of born black Americans (341,408) who died in 2018. Since federal abortion statistics are hindered by voluntary reporting and variable standards among the states, the actual numbers are likely much higher.

In her Friday comments to Fox News, Owens agreed with West's assertion that Planned Parenthood's founding purpose was to perpetrate eugenics and to deplete the U.S. black population.

"It is true that Planned Parenthood was founded by a eugenicist, who did not want black people to procreate," Owens said. "So, quite frankly, Margaret Sanger, she was a success story. She created Planned Parenthood, and she wanted to target people that she saw as not wanting to be reproduced in this society, and black people were targeted."

"It has been successful, so Kanye West is right to continue to beat the drum and to draw attention to this issue," Owens said.

Pro-life advocates have extensively detailed the fact that Planned Parenthood founder Margaret Sanger was a member of the American Eugenics Society who wrote that the "campaign for birth control is […] practically identical in ideal with the final aim of eugenics."

In her autobiography, Sanger admitted that in 1926 she spoke to the "women's branch of the Ku Klux Klan," through which she said she "accomplished my purpose" by inspiring a "dozen invitations to speak to similar groups."

A 2015 policy report submitted to the U.S. Congress by the Center for Urban Renewal and Education (CURE) observed that "the leading consumer of the abortionists' services is the African-American female."

In its report, CURE argued that "[t]he prevalence of abortion facilities within minority communities serves as a major contributor to the rate in which black women obtain abortions," citing a study released by Protecting Black Life, an outreach of Life Issues Institute, which concluded that "79% of Planned Parenthood's surgical abortion facilities are strategically located within walking distance of African and/or Hispanic communities."

"This study coincides with historical revelations that eugenicists dating to the mid-1900s, '[argued] that the most effective way they could advance their agenda would be to concentrate population control facilities within targeted communities,'" the report stated.

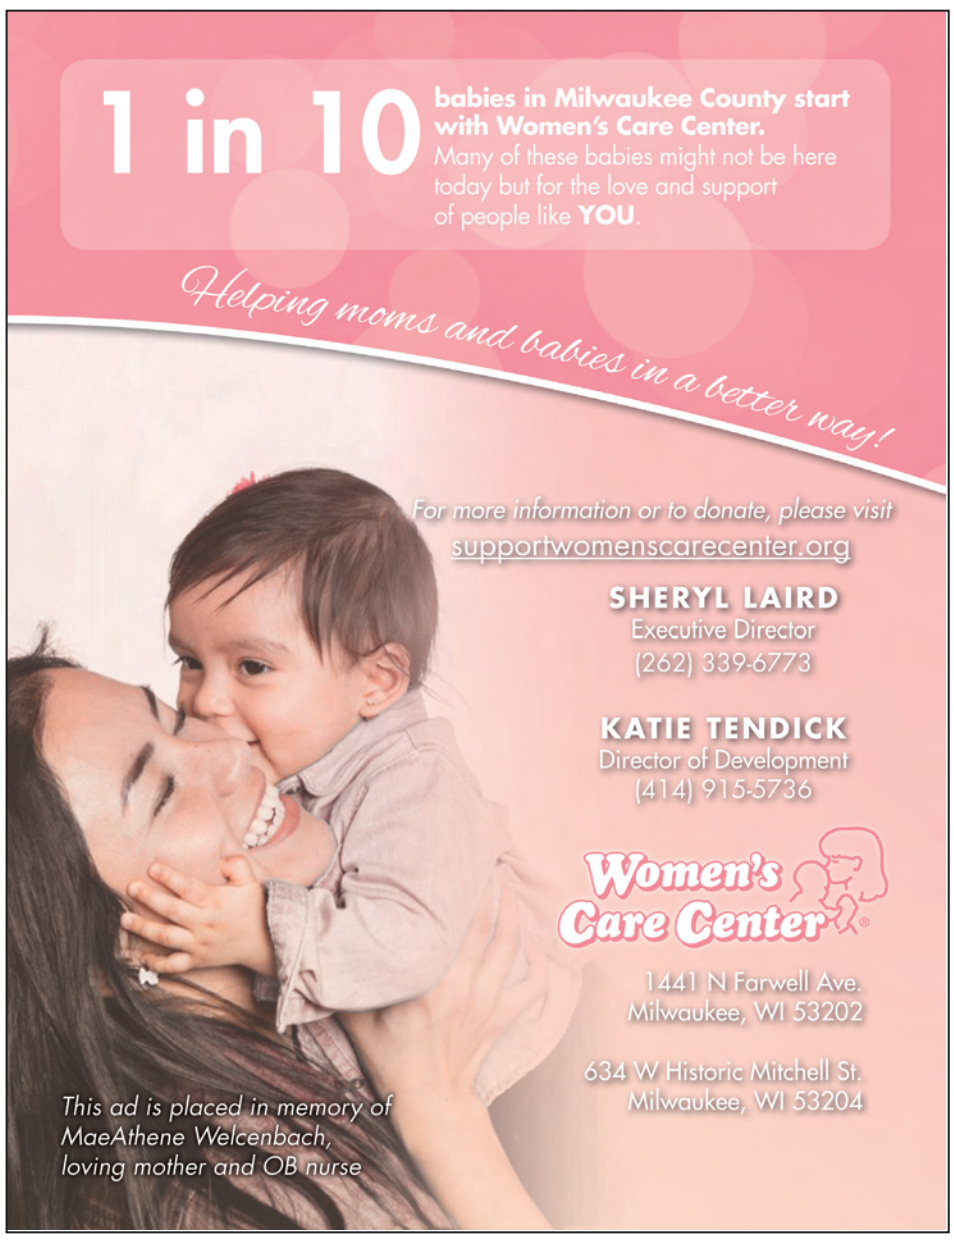
The racist and eugenicist ambitions of Planned Parenthood's founder has caused discomfort among modern abortion supporters.

Last summer, Planned Parenthood of Greater New York's board chairwoman Karen Seltzer announced Margaret Sanger's name would be scrubbed from Planned Parenthood's Manhattan health center as "a necessary and overdue step to reckon with our legacy and acknowledge Planned Parenthood's contributions to historical reproductive harm within communities of color," the National Catholic Register reported.

Citing Sanger's "racist legacy" Seltzer said the abortion pioneer's "deep belief in eugenic ideology… runs completely counter to our values at PPGNY."

Despite the erasure of Sanger's name from the building, pro-life advocates have pointed out that Planned Parenthood continues to perform the work desired by 20th century eugenicists.

A 2018 op-ed in the Wall Street Journal noted that "[in] New York City, thousands more black babies are aborted each year than born alive."



VOICE OF JERUSALEM

Hamas is the Beneficiary of Joe Biden's Delusional Diplomacy

By Caroline Glick

Earlier this month, international aid began flowing into the Gaza Strip. More than a billion dollars have been pledged. Qatar and Egypt, the Biden administration and the United Nations are all keen to move as quickly as possible to rebuild the buildings that were destroyed during Hamas' last missile offensive against Israel in May.

Over a 10-day period in May, Hamas shot approximately 4,500 missiles, rockets and mortars at Israel, targeting its population centers from the Gaza border to Tel Aviv and Jerusalem. In response, Israel targeted Gaza's missile stores, launch sites, communications hubs and subterranean military infrastructure.

According to Hamas, Israel Defense Forces bombings caused a bit less than half a billion dollars in damage. So if the pledges for assistance are honored, Hamas will not only cover its losses—it will be rewarded for its aggression.

In the meantime, anti-Israel congressional Democrats nearly capsized approval of supplemental funding for Israel's Iron Dome missile defense batteries. Were it not for the Iron Dome system, which intercepted most of Hamas' projectiles before they reached their targets, Israel would have sustained massive loss in life and property. The 10-day campaign would have rapidly escalated into a full-blown land war.

There might be an argument to be made for rewarding Hamas for its wanton aggression against Israel if there were any reason to believe that Hamas might consider changing its ways—if Hamas announced that it planned to abandon its war against the Jewish state and seek peace instead. But the opposite is the case. Hamas remains dead-set on its goal of not only annihilating Israel, but of carrying out a genocide of the bulk of Israel's 6.5 million Jews and then subjugating any survivors. Moreover, the outcome of Hamas' aggression against Israel last spring has convinced the terror regime that such a goal is within plausible reach.

This conviction was the rationale for a triumphant conference that the Hamas regime sponsored in Gaza on September 30. The conference, held in conjunction with the Palestinian NGO Promise of the Hereafter Institute, was titled, "Promise of the Hereafter: Post-Liberation Palestine." Hamas leader Yahya Sinwar chaired the proceedings. The Middle East Media Research Institute (MEMRI) translated the concluding statement. The MEMRI report is worth reading in full, but a few points stand out.

The purpose of the conference was to determine how to administer "Palestine" after Israel is destroyed and disappears. Participants agreed that upon Israel's destruction, non-Muslims in "Palestine" will be ruled by the Pact of Umar. The Pact of Umar was concluded around 637, with the fall of Byzantine-held Jerusalem to Muslim conquerors. The Pact sets out the conditions under which non-Muslims are permitted to live under Islamist rule.

The Pact of Umar explains how non-Muslims, referred to as "dhimmis," are to live in a perpetual state of powerlessness and subservience to their Islamic rulers. It places severe constraints on their freedom of worship and imposes a continuous ransom for the lives of non-Muslim men, called the "jizya" tax. Under the Pact, Islamist rulers spare the lives of non-Muslims who accept their dhimmi status, but are free to kill non-Muslims who refuse to accept the constraints.

Last month's Hamas conference determined that Jews who survive Israel's destruction must be placed in three separate groups. The first group includes the Jewish "fighters." They must be killed. The second group includes the "peaceful Jews" who surrender. They can either be integrated into Palestine, as dhimmis, or "be given time to leave."

The final group is comprised of "educated Jews and experts in the areas of medicine, engineering, technology and civilian and military industry." To prevent a brain-drain with the destruction of the Jewish state, Hamas conference participants determined that these Jews "should be retained for some time and should not be allowed to leave."

Another key preoccupation of the Hamas conference participants was getting their hands on Palestinians who worked with Israel.

"The minute 'Israel' collapses," the final report determined, "the interim government's security apparatuses must put their hands on the data regarding the agents of the occupation of Palestine in the region and throughout the world, and discover the names of the recruiters, Jewish and non-Jewish, in the country and abroad. Using this information, we can purge Palestine and the Arab and Islamic homeland of the hypocrite scum that spread corruption in the land."

The conference was called last month because Hamas and its supporters feel that "victory is nigh." Israel's days are numbered, Hamas believes, and now is the time to prepare.

Where did Hamas get the idea that its moment of victory against the Jews is at hand? Why did Hamas decide that now is the time to figure out how to engage the international community; what to do with Israel's international treaty obligations as a "Palestine" successor state; and what currency will replace the Israeli shekel?

The answer is fairly clear. Hamas' operation against Israel in May was unlike any of its many predecessors. For the first time since 1947, many Israeli-Arabs were full, open participants in a Palestinian military assault on the Jewish state. Hamas was able to extend its reach to within Israel without sending invading forces across the physical border.

While Hamas' terror forces in Gaza attacked Israel with an average of 450 missiles a day for 10 days, Israeli-Arab mobs invariably rioted countrywide. They burned and looted Jewish homes, businesses and synagogues in mixed Jewish-Arab cities. They lynched Jewish neighbors and passersby. And they tied their fortunes and fates to those of Hamas.

Hamas began its offensive as the Netanyahu government was on its way out of power. Now, Israel is led by a government dominated by the Left, and which rules with a bare one-seat parliamentary majority. Israel's Muslim Brotherhood-aligned Islamist party Ra'am is a member of the governing coalition. With its meager four-seat Knesset faction, Ra'am can bring down the government whenever it wishes. Ra'am's lawmakers have repeatedly pledged to bolt—and thereby collapse—the government if Prime Minister Naftali Bennett launches a campaign against Hamas.

Whereas in the past, Congress has been loath to fund Hamas-ruled Gaza, today it is support for Israel that has become controversial. With a growing anti-Israel faction in the Democratic congressional caucus, support for Israel has grown politically costly for many members of the Democratic majority on the Hill. Support for Hamas, on the other hand, is becoming a cost-free vote for many Democrats.

Last week, Israel's dovish foreign minister, Yair Lapid, visited Washington. Amidst his meetings with top Biden administration officials, reports arose of a dispute between the sides over funding for Hamas. Lapid, like the Biden administration, supports transferring astronomical amounts of money to Hamas-controlled Gaza to build its economy. Lapid even supports transferring dual-use construction materials that Hamas can easily use to quickly restore and expand its missile arsenals and other offensive weapons systems.

But according to the reports, Lapid wishes to delay the transfer of the funds and the construction materials until after a deal is reached in which Hamas releases its two Israeli hostages and returns the bodily remains of two Israeli soldiers it has been holding since its last full-scale war against Israel, in 2014. President Joe Biden and Secretary of State Antony Blinken reportedly rejected Lapid's postion and demanded the immediate transfer of funds and materiel to Gaza, with no strings or conditions attached.

Lapid's dispute with the administration is utterly irrelevant and deeply counterproductive in light of Hamas' offensive strategy, its genocidal plans and its triumphant posture. It is a testament to the delusion at the heart of the pro-Palestinian camp, as well as the grave danger such delusion represents to the security and survival of the State of Israel, that these discussions are even taking place.

Thanksgiving Message

people suffering at the time prayed and hoped for a redeemer, a savior. Wasn't it ironic that He was a descendent of Solomon and his father David?

Ecclesiastes Chapter 3 reads "…I saw under the sun the place of judgement, that wickedness was there; and the place of righteousness, that iniquity was there. I said in my heart, God shall judge the righteous and the wicked: for there is a time there for every purpose and every work." I would urge you NOT to put faith and trust in people and organizations who continue to lie and deceive, but instead listen and patronize people of integrity and honor. People who fear God and believe in simple human commandments as the way of life to spread true prosperity and human peace. Leading into the holiday season, many people rely on their own religion and leaders in whom they place their faith, trust and honor. This is good. To all those who continue to toil and yield good works, be thankful for your freedom of speech and religion.

These individuals and entities promote the good and welfare for all of humanity, not just select groups and special interests. They care for people because of upbringings based on faith, love and charity, not prejudice, polarization, hate and division. I personally believe that one human existed here on earth with supernatural powers who produced many miracles, signs and wonders that no other human has ever done. He did so by spreading love, peace and joy and is considered to be the light, the truth and the way. I truly believe that whatever religion you practice and follow, that as long as you labor here on earth (be fruitful), do what is right, and fear your God or Gods, there can be true peace and prosperity here on earth.

Going into Thanksgiving and the Holiday Seasons, please consider the following verses:

Behold that which I have seen: it is good and comely for one to eat and to drink, and to enjoy the good of all his labor that he taketh under the sun all the days of his life, which God giveth him: for it is his portion. Every man also to whom God hath given riches and wealth, and hath given him power to eat thereof, and to take his portion, and to rejoice in his labor; this is the gift of God. For he shall not much remember the days of his life; because God answereth him in the joy of his heart. Let us hear the conclusion of the whole matter: Fear God, and keep his commandments: for this is the whole duty of man. For God shall bring every work into judgment, with every secret thing, whether it be good, or whether it be evil. Amen!

Don't get vaccinated

was a license for the Pfizer vaccine called Comirnaty on August 23 [2021]. "

Comirnaty approval includes important caveats

In the documents released August 23, 2021 by the FDA, there were some interesting caveats. They said the Comirnaty vaccine is essentially equivalent to the EUA vaccine and the two vaccines may be used interchangeably. However, they pointed out that the two are legally distinct. Curiously, FDA didn't specify what these legal distinctions are.

"I concluded that the legal distinctions were the fact that under EUA, there was essentially no manufacturer liability, but once the vaccine got licensed, the manufacturer would be subject to liability claims unless and until the vaccine was placed on the childhood schedule or recommended in pregnancy, in which case it would then fall … under the NVICP," Nass says.

"Right now, Comirnaty is still not in that injury compensation program, and it's licensed, so it no longer falls under the CICP. So, it is in fact subject to liability if you get injured with a bottle that says Comirnaty on it. Of course, if you're Pfizer, what do you want to do?

Top ICU doctor files lawsuit to use 'proven' Covid treatments, including ivermectin

By WorldTribune Staff, November 11, 2021

One of the top critical care physicians in the world has filed a lawsuit to allow he and his colleagues to administer ivermectin as part of treating Covid patients.

Dr. Paul Marik, Director of the ICU at Sentara Norfolk General Hospital, filed the lawsuit after being instructed by Sentara Healthcare that he could no longer administer a range of what he says are highly effective Covid-19 treatments to critically ill patients, the Front Line Covid-19 Critical Care Alliance (FLCCC) reported on Nov. 10.

Ivermectin was part of the same treatments Marik says he has successfully used to reduce Covid deaths in the ICU by as much as 50 percent.

"The result of the prohibition has been a sharp increase in patient mortality," the report said. "Dr. Marik can no longer stand by while patients needlessly die without proper treatment."

The complaint filed in the Circuit Court for the City of Norfolk, Virginia states that Sentara Healthcare is "preventing terminally ill COVID patients from exercising their right to choose and to receive safe, potentially life-saving treatment determined to be appropriate for them by their attending physician."

"This case is about doctors, having the ability to honor their Hippocratic Oath, to follow evidence-based medicine, and to treat our patients the best we know how. Corporations and faceless bureaucrats should not be allowed to interfere with doctor-patient decisions, especially when it can result in harm or death." said Marik, who is chief of the Division of Pulmonary & Critical Care Medicine at Eastern Virginia Medical School and practices in the Sentara Norfolk General Hospital. "I refuse to watch another patient die from COVID-19 knowing that I was not allowed to give them proven treatments that could have saved their life."

An accompanying declaration from a Dr. Joseph Varon, a renowned critical care specialist recently recognized by the United Nations for his life-saving work, the Covid treatment protocol developed by Dr. Marik and his colleagues, called the "MATH+ Protocol," has achieved at least a 50 percent reduction in deaths from the virus in the hospitals where he serves as Chief of Staff.

"The Sentara Healthcare System's prohibition of the MATH+ protocol is a threat to every doctor and every patient in the U.S.," said Pierre Kory, president and chief medical officer of the Front Line COVID-19 Critical Care Alliance (FLCCC). "We know the protocol is effective. Patients who could have been saved by MATH+ are dying because of the hospital's baseless restriction. We will continue to see more deaths that could have been prevented until the court takes action and orders the hospital to reverse course."

The MATH+ protocol has been used all over the world to effectively treat patients with COVID-19, the FLCCC noted, adding that it is generally well-tolerated with no reports of adverse medical events.

In a Sept. 27 memo to employees, Sentara Healthcare System tried to justify prohibiting many of the medications in the MATH+ protocol by claiming it "is not supported in peer-reviewed, published RCTs (Randomized Controlled Trials)."

This claim is demonstrably false, the FLCCC said, adding that peer-reviewed published RCTs do support the use many of the medications Sentara has prohibited, including fluvoxamine and ivermectin.

"The FLCCC stands behind Paul 100 percent," said Dr. Kory. "We take an oath as doctors to do no harm. I can't think of a way of doing more harm to a patient than to not administer a treatment that you know can help them. No doctor should be forced to watch their patient die knowing that more could have been done to save them and that is exactly what Sentara is doing."

How Do We Determine Whether a Therapy is Effective?

By John Droz, jr., Physicist

When it comes to treating a medical ailment — let's say COVID-19 — there are two major concerns regarding such treatments: Safety and Effectiveness. In this short discussion we'll address the effectiveness part, of possible pharmaceuticals.

From a simplified perspective, the two main ways of determining effectiveness of a drug to treat COVID-19, are Macro and Micro. Let's use ivermectin as an example.

Briefly, the Macro approach would start with in-vitro experiments. In other words, a drug (e.g., ivermectin) would first have to show some promise in a laboratory setting — i.e., that it would have killed or disabled the COVID-19 virus.

Assuming that it met safety standards (ivermectin did — e.g., here) it would then be given to give patients who have been infected with COVID-19 to see what happens. To get a more accurate idea of effectiveness, studies would compare the results of people who got ivermectin, with those who got a placebo.

Double blind clinical trials would be where neither the patient nor the scientists running the study would know who got what, until the end. Peer-Reviewed studies would be those that independent, non-participating scientists double-checked the methodology and results, and agree with the conclusions.

For ivermectin there have been sixty-five (65) studies, thirty one (31) double-blind, and forty-four (44) peer-reviewed. The results have been very positive — or in the language of scientists: "robust."

Yet, despite these macro successes, the Medical Establishment (WHO, FDA, CDC, AMA) have not given their endorsement of ivermectin. For a more detailed discussion of this unscientific response see this and this.

This leads us to the completely different Micro analysis. Basically this approach is to look at what is happening on a molecular level — and then make a determination as to what drugs are the most effective. In other words, this is usually a bio-chemical assessment in a lab. Although this can be a complex matter, we'll try to keep it simple.

An interesting part about this, is the question: what makes a drug an effective antiviral? A virus is like a parasite: for it to do damage, it needs to latch onto healthy cells. So, one of the simplest ways to define an effective anti-virus drug, is to identify those pharmaceuticals that keep an attacking virus (e.g., from COVID-19) from being able to attach to our healthy cells.

There are easily over a thousand drugs (which are just different chemical compounds) that have potential (on paper) to be an anti-viral. So, has anyone sorted through most of these, and done a determination as to which (if any) are going to be effective with COVID-19? Yes!

This study started with some four thousand pharmaceuticals, and scientifically weeded them down to the best 47 candidates (based on in-vitro results). The conclusion (e.g., Figure 4 and Table 2) is that ivermectin was the most effective drug for COVID-19! Some other studies that confirm the molecular level benefits of ivermectin are here and here.

The bottom line is that from both the Macro and Micro perspectives, ivermectin (when properly administered) is a powerful broad-spectrum drug, that has anti-viral properties that effectively disable the COVID-19 virus.

As such, there is no legitimate scientific reason that the Medical Establishment has not given ivermectin its full approval and support.
